Bonheur Bros. dog and pony show here last Friday night gave a very pleasing little entertainment. However, if they would "cut out" a good deal of the poor clown work, have less peering and let the more intelligent dogs and ponies and goats do the entertaining, it would be more appreciated.

Stewart Conger is out of luck. His fine young trotting horse, Robin Hood, which he was training to enter the races during the Carnival, got a badly sprained ankle last week, which puts him out of the race for the present. It's too bad, as the horse was developing a mighty fast gait for a green horse. However, he will undoubtedly be all right in a short time, as the injury is not permanent.

Pot hunters had better look a little out. There has been a great deal of complaint of violation of the game laws hereabouts of late, so much so that we were visited by Deputy Game Warden Smith the first part of week, who caused the fine on Monday of a young man of Logan township, who was caught heavy handed on Sunday evening. Deputy Smith put in all of Sunday circling the country round Loup City, and while he came into close quarters with the guilty parties at various times during the day and evening, wire fences and corn fields were too numerous and handy for the pot hunters, who took to their heels within the recesses of the forests of tall corn, and it was not till about 11 o'clock at night that he bagged game he was after, in the shape of one young man, as mentioned aforesaid. We trust this will be a fair warning to those who are in too much of a hurry to wait till the season properly opens, and that violation of the game law may cease in this neck of the woods, at least.

Ashton Woodmen in the Lead.

In company with Robt. P. Starr and Judge Wall, the editor visited Ashton, last Saturday evening, the occasion being the dedication of their new M. W. A. hall in that lively little village. Arriving in Ashton about 8:30 that evening, we were conducted to the hall, which was comfortably filled with the good people of that thriving village, and the services of dedication were had. Ashton has a nice little band, which livened up the occasion with patriotic airs interspersed between the speeches, which were made by the invited guests and local talent. The ceremonies were opened by the presiding officer, Mr. Thos. Jamrog, who in a few well chosen words introduced the first speaker of the evening, Mr. Theo. Ojendyk, followed by Banker Polski, the gentlemen being particularly happy over the new little building the axemen had erected in their village. Following came Mr. Starr, who was at his best and gave an interesting talk on woodcraft, interspersed with anecdotes, and which for fifteen minutes gave the people a heart to heart talk on the benefits of the order and heartily congratulated the brotherhood on their new home. He was cheered to the echo. Then came Judge Wall, who was in his happiest mood and beginning with one of his choicest stories, which convulsed his hearers, followed with a splendid peroration on the benefits accruing from this greatest of all fraternal orders. At the close of the ceremonies, at the hall, the people repaired to the old hall occupied by the order, turned into a banqueting room for the occasion, and which was occupied by a long table reaching from one end of the room to the other, and was soon filled with the merry company, who did ample justice to the splendidly prepared feast, the handiwork of the wives and daughters of the brotherhood. Following the banquet, a dance was held in the new hall, to choice music, and the hours were happily passed by the lovers of the light fantastic. We do not know of an occasion we enjoyed more pleasantly than the evening in question. The good people of that pleasant and progressive village vied with each other in making the evening the pleasantest in the history of the lives of their guests and nothing was too good for them. Ashton has reason to be proud of the brotherhood of Woodmen in their village, and that they are of the most progressive kind is evidenced by the splendid new building the order has erected. But how otherwise could anything be expected, when Messrs. Jamrog, Ojendyk, Julius Beuschhausen, Polski, Dr. Wanek, and a host of other of Ashton's enterprising citizens have put their shoulders to the enterprise. The Woodmen have a membership of over half a hundred and we confidently expect to hear of the membership being more than doubled within the next few months.

If a newspaper says something about a man that he does not like, how quick he will rush to a printing office to have it corrected or lick the editor—if he can. But on the other hand if the paper speaks well of him, ten to one he will never show his appreciation in thought deed or action.

H. C. McKanen of Cass county, Nebraska, says to sprinkle common flour on cabbage heads while the dew is on them, that this will form a glaze that will prevent the cabbage worm from working. He thinks this remedy more effective and less expensive than any other he has ever seen recommended.

The young ladies who picnicked on the river a few days last week, closed their contract for killing of the yellow fever insects the third day and came home in time to escape a good soaking rain that evening. R. J. Nightingale and family returned from the west and report a high time. Nothing like a vacation to make this old world run on oiled wheels again. We have to be satisfied with the simple life, a la Wagner, and hold down our side of the band wagon in the busy mart, or there might be a literary hand-stand.

The contest for Queen of the Carnival closed last Saturday evening, Miss Cora Leininger being the successful contestant, the last few hours being very spirited in the good natured rivalry. Arrangements are being made for a great time this (Thursday) evening, at 7:30, when the public crowning of the Queen will take place with interesting ceremonies. Don't fail to be on hand.

A young man by the name of Lou Spelts, living in Elkhorn valley, met with a very severe and painful accident last Monday evening. In an altercation he accidentally ran his arm through one of the large panes of glass in Mullick's saloon, severing all the tendons in the back of the hand at the wrist, and cutting the arteries. Dr. Long, assisted by Dr. Allen, united the tendons and dressed the wound.
