NO-CHOKE

LITCHFIELD ENDLESS CONVEYER

It has been almost universally conceded that an endless conveyer is the most practical kind for a Manure Spreader, and is an ideal form of construction, if the troubles due to clogging up with certain kinds of material and in severe cold weather could be overcome. This is even admitted by our competition.

Therefore, to prove absolutely that the Litchfield Manure Spreader is superior to every other machine on the market in this particular part, we have endeavored to prove that the Litchfield automatic section conveyer is the only non-clogging conveyer manufactured.

As evidence to our readers that the Litchfield fully controls the no-choke conveyer, we refer to the records of the patent office which will verify our statements. It is easy for anyone to understand why other spreader interests will attempt to throw "cold water" on the growing popularity of the no-choke endless conveyer. It is always a hard struggle for any individual and radical improvement to gain a foothold where competition, by being out from the use of this improvement, is continually arguing against it.

We therefore say to our readers: Do not let the arguments against the endless conveyer, that are commonly offered by interests manufacturing the other kind, mislead you. All the arguments that are put up against the endless conveyer do not hold good in any way when it comes to applying them to the Litchfield No-choke Endless Conveyer.

See the machine. See it work and judge for yourself. Investigate the style of construction and the manner in which this conveyer is put into one machine and the why it works and use your own judgment.

We hope no customer will buy a Litchfield Spreader simply because we, or any of our agents, say it is the best. What we want is investigation. All we want is a fair chance and we will show you that the Litchfield Spreader is not anywhere near duplicated by any other make of machine being manufactured in the United States, or elsewhere, today. Time is telling the story very fast and sure.
