exclaimed the young woman in the lavender dress and with the elaborately coiled hair. 'You simply don't know-

"Oh, I wasn't much hurt," broke in the young man in a beautifully offhand way, as one to whom the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune counted little.

"Now, you say that just because you are so brave," the young woman declared. "You wouldn't notice what would simply crush an ordinary man. I know you were almost killed. Tell me all about it." "Well, I don't want to boast," said the young man, "but really I don't think many men would have got off as I did. I have presence of mind if I haven't much else worth while." "The idea!" said the young woman, as she opened the box of candy. "Why, I could name heaps of fine qualities you have. · You shouldn't talk so about yourself."

The young man waved a depreciating hand, but he beamed with satisfaction.

"It was so brave of you to fight off that huge, desperate robber," went, on the young woman. "I am dying to hear about it."

The young man hitched around in his chair and then honesty won out. "I can't say that he was so very big," he confessed. "I was a head taller than he was and he didn't seem very strong. But then, on the other hand, I think I'd have done just as I did if he'd been a Samson!"

"Of course you would," cried the young woman. "You are the most reckless creature!"

The young man tried to look reckless, but nearly choked because his collar was so tight. "He stepped out from behind the shelter of a tree and I could see the glitter of his revolver," he said, by way of beginning his

The young woman shrieked. "Good ness!" she cried. "You simply scare me to death. Why, I know I'd have expired on the spot! You don't suppose there's a robber looking in at the window now, do you? My, I'm glad you're here! It makes me feel perfectly safe!"

The young man crossed over and sat beside her on the davenport. "There isn't a thing to be afarid of Sadie," he said, soothingly. "Well, then he ordered me to hand over my money and my watch."

"Think of it!" cried the young woman. "Then you just doubled up your fist and knocked him away out into the street, didn't you?" she asked, eagerly. "I can see you doing it! If there is one thing more than another that I adore it is a brave, brave man!"

The young man shifted one foot across the other and seemed to find difficulty in speaking. "N-no, I didn't quite do that," he said, slowly. "Iyou see, that revolver looked mighty businesslike. I told him I had no watch and only 50 cents in my pocket, and when he found out it was true it seemed to irritate him. That was when he knocked me down."

"You poor boy!" murmured the girl in a voice full of emotion. "To think of you suffering as you did! You don't know how I felt when I heard "Did you really?" asked the young man. "Well, I made up my mind that when I got up I'd beat him within an inch of his life." "I should say you did perfectly right," cried the girl. "It was noble of you not to have done so before, but after he treated you as he did I am so glad you punished him." "There certainly wouldn't have been much left of the fellow!" said the young man, fiercely. "I had fully made up my mind." "Did he beg for mercy," asked the girl, "or didn't you give him time?" The young man looked indignant,

"What could you expect of a rascal ike that?" he demanded. "What do you think he did? Ran away from me! And by the time I was on my feet he had disappeared!"

"What a coward!" said the girl. "I suppose your bravery alarmed him dreadfully. And it was lucky for him that he did run, because there is no stopping you when you begin to assert yourself. Well, I think he just about owes his life to his getting out of your way in time."

" think more than likely you are right," admitted the young man as he reached for her hand. "Say, honest. Sadie, would you have cared very much if he had killed me?"-Chicago Daily News.

Animals Escape Forest Fires.

With the exception of nesting birds, few wild animals perish in a forest fire. They have instinctive knowledge of it long before it reaches them and fly to swamps and large rivers. They can generally outrun the flames. Hu man lives have been saved by horses instinctively taking to water.

Warned by Fish.

Many anglers have great faith in fish as weather prophets. If a storm is approaching, they say, the fish stop biting, and they won't bite again until the storm is past. They also foretell the near approach of cold weather. Hours before it comes fish leave the shallow waters in-shore and seek deeper water, which, owing to its depth, will stay warm and keep an equable temperature after the shallower and surface waters are cold.

Energetic Claridon Women. That the women of East Claridon have fallen heir to the masculine energy which built the houses and farms around this neighborhood is shown by the fact that when you meet a team the women nearly always are driving. In this the women excel, and it is only an occasional farmer's team which does not seem to be in possession of some woman.-Chicago Trib-
