HISTORIC HOUSES

Washington

Washington, as we all know, was initiated into military life by the breaking out of the French and Indian war, which culminated in the ascendency of British rule in Canada. The march of Braddock through the wilderness to the bloody gorges of the Monongahela stands out as the most tragic event of that struggle.

On one of the back streets of Frederick stands the headquarters of Washington, a rather dilapidated building, with quaint little windows and narrow doors, the whole forming to-day a tout ensemble of loneliness and dilapidation. The owl and the bat make it their abode, the roof is sadly in need of repairs and the only evidence of modernism that prevails about it is the little cabbage garden between it and the street. A move-Mrs. Enos Shearer, Yew and Wash. ment has been started looking to the ington Sta., Centralia, Wash., with one restoration of this historical house. kidney gone, the which at one time sheltered our first other badly diseased, president and it is possible that some and five doctors in day it may be restored to its original

It is a far cry in Washington's life from Winchester to the final campaign at Yorktown, where the American revolution met with its crowning success. Washington was now at the pinnacle of his fame as a soldier and the star of hope for the colonies was brightening the heavens. The long roll of English supremacy on this continent was beating. The American army, 15,000 strong, lay about Williamsburg, 14 miles from the "final scene of glory." Washington was surrounded by such men as Lafayette, Rochambeau, Lincoln and Hamilton, and in the mansion where he had established headquarters were held the most momentous councils of war witnessed during which the main hallway leads; and it sence, the revolution. The house is still in an excellent state of preservation. In- was there in Washington's day that deed, it looks as well now as when for the defeat of Lord Cornwallis. It was a brilliant military court that Washington held at Williamsburg, almost within a stone's throw of William and Mary college, the alma ma- of the forthcoming expedition in this ter of Jefferson, Henry and other distinguished Americans, and but a few steps from the house, now in ruins, where he courted the "Widow Custis." It was from the Williamsburg house that Washington set out for Yorktown.

There is perhaps in this country no than Williamsburg, which was the colonial capital of Virginia. It is connected with great events from the earliest settlements to the civil war. Not least among them is the gathering of the Americans and French for the last campaign of the revolution. It witnessed the preparation of the trap that caught Cornwallis and the brilliant reception of the French officers by Washington. And it is a source of gratification that the headquarters of the field, is so well preserved, rising to-day in its original appearance above the tender roses of a southern clime.

a few women of the old families of Virginia, the house in which George Washington received the invitation to become an aid to Maj. Gen. Braddock in his famous campaign against the French has been saved from destruction. This incident in Washington's career is of special interest, for it was from the campaign which followed that Washington gained his first insight into the military methods of European countries, and of Great Britain in particular. The house is the Carlyle house, in Alexandria, Va. It was Braddock's headquarters while he was in Alex-

The broad hallway is not without its sentimental interest, because local tradition asserts that it was at the foot of the solid mahogany staircase that Washington stood awaiting the coming of the fair Sallie Fairfax on the occasion of a ball, and that the ballroom was where he proposed to the same Sallie and was rejected.

It is believed that some day that portion of the deserted hotel which now stands between the Carlyle house the First American, one of his last in and the street may be removed so that the house may stand once more in plain sight of the passerby. PROBABLE NEW GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA

DOMINION PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS, OFTAWA, CANADA

TTAWA, ONT -The people of Canada have heard with considerable satisfaction the report that Earl Carrington has been selected to succeed Eari Grey as governor general of the dominion. The change, it is expected, will be made very soon, formal announcement of the appointment being looked for daily. Earl Carrington is joint hereditary lord great chamberlain of England and has been president of the board of agriculture of that country since 1905. He was governor of New South Wales from 1885 to 1890, and from 1892 to 1895 he was lord chamberlain of the royal household. During this period King Edward took a great liking to the earl and ever since they have been on such intimate terms that it is said when they are alone together Carrington can, with perfect impunity, slap his sovereign on the back and even call him by his first name. Earl Carrington is 65 years old and was educated at Eton and Cambridge. He owns about 22,000 acres of land and is a liberal in politics.

"We live in the trading craft that came from over the Puget Sound district, which is said to sea to barter the silks and satins and produce the finest bulbs in the world.

"Sister and I have been in the business ever since we were ten or twelve. Father gave us a small lot in the vegetable garden, telling us that we could have all the money we could make out in the military councils of preparation of it. Mother advised us to plant gladioli and aaffodils. Being fond of flowers, we worked very hard every afternoon after school hours. Our first year's earnings were enough to return and we had five dollars besides to start a bank account.

"This money was all gained from the gladioli, as it takes them only one year to make good bulbs. As daffedils only have to be replanted every three the great drawing room, which in years our second spring was devoted to enlarging our gladiolus bed.
