ACTIVITY IN THE WHITE HOUSE PNEUMONIA PROBABLE CAUSE

Long and Short Haul is a Subject of Much Controversy in the Upper Branch.

Washington.-Under a flag of truce, hostilities between the conservative and progressive republicans of the senate over the administration railroad bill have ceased temporarily. They will be renewed probably when Senators Cummins and Dolliver return Thursday from Iowa, where they have gone to open the campaign. Senator Aldrich is expected to return from Riode Island Tuesday. If he should attempt to precipitate a vote on any important amendment Senators LaFollette and Clapp will undertake to hod the floor.

Meanwhile the White House will be the scene of the real activities, President Taft having undertaken to bring into line some of the so-called "near insurgents" whose attitude on the railroad bill has been a matter of doubt. That work was begun Saturday and it was claimed that Senators Gamble and Crawford of South Dakota would join the forty-five regular republicans previously canvassed, making the necessary "all republican majority" for the administration program.

While an understanding was reached in the house that the vote on the railroad bill would be taken Tuesday, it now seems certain that the democrats will seek to have the bill recommitted with instructions that the sections be eliminated. The vote, it is conceded, will be close.

In the senate the long and short haul provision is the immediate subject of controversy, but is receiving little more attention than the stock and bond sections which come further along in the bill and which are far more puzzling. The president and the attorney general are pressing for their retention and, inclined to accede to their demands, the regular republicans will make a stand for the sections. Some of the regulars, however, would be pleased if they were eliminated.

Among those who are understood to doubt the wisdom of their retentionare Senators Aldrich, Elkins and Root, all of whom concede the possibility of legal complications over The directors of the Pennsylvania their conflict with state laws.
