J. W. BURLEIGH, Ed. and Pub.

C. F. Beushausen of the Times went to Lincoln Monday morning, ostensibly to attend the State Editorial Association, but more likely to boom his boomlet for the state office of land commissioner. Wonder if Beushausen told the editors the way he slashes the price of legal in order to get the same away from his brother newspaper men and in other ways proves an unfair competitor? We also wonder if he will continue to carry the prohibition banner on one shoulder and the brewery interests on the other, in his effort to boost himself into a state office? The efforts of the Northwestern to get the Times man to come out in the open on the temperance question since he became proprietor of the paper and candidate for state office on the democratic side, proves unavailing, and the only answer he makes is to whine about the Northwestern editor's unchristian-like attitude in bringing to light his non-committal policy on this great question. Before Beushausen became editor of the Times, he was in the fore-front of the anti-saloon league in Loup City; since that time he is as mum as his prototype, the oyster, on this question. Now Cholly will undoubtedly take this article as some more unchristian act on the part of the writer. But, really, dear Cholly, are you still a German prohibitionist, or have you gone over body, soul and breaches into the Lutheran camp?

W. R. Mellor in England Kingsley Hotel, Hart St., Bloomsbury Square, London, May 12, 1910-My dear Burleigh: Altho' in far off England, my thoughts will wander to my old Loup City friends, and I find myself wishing that some of you were here to enjoy our trip with us.
We left Halifax, N. B., on Saturday, April 23rd, at 7 p. m., and just six days later, to-wit: 7 o'clock Friday evening, the 2nd, our steamer, the "Empress of Ireland," tied up at the Liverpool dock. This steamer is 585 feet in length, 65 feet in width and has accommodations for passengers on five different decks or cabins. The whole of Loup City's population could be comfortably housed on board and transported on one trip. The engines of the boat were said to be 1800 horse power and altho' there was a terrific wind and storm one day, the boat kept its uninterrupted course and impressed one with its mighty power, which seemingly was unaffected by the elements. The distance travelled was noted in the "log" after the observations taken every day at 12 o'clock noon, and showed that we varied from 418 to 435 miles each day.
The great power of the engines makes it possible for the wireless telegraphy to dispatch or receive messages from the very center of the ocean, and arriving at breakfast we were presented with a copy of a daily paper, printed on board with all the leading news events of the world just the same as tho' we had been on land, excepting that each telegram was as concise as possible. We remained in Liverpool a couple of days in order to permit Mrs. Mellor to recuperate, as she was quite sick the entire voyage, then we visited in succession Manchester—where we had a nice visit with Church Howe, the American consul, and a native of Nebraska whom you and many of the boys are personally acquainted with; Staleybridge, the town in which my parents resided prior to their removal to America; Oldham, where I met a number of my relatives on my father's side, Holmfirth, Leeds and Padney, where some of the remaining relatives on my mother's side still live, Huddersfield, York, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin, Chester, Stratford-on-Avon, and landed here in London a couple of days since. At York we viewed the walls encircling the old city, and being from 10 to 40 feet in height and 3 1/2 miles in length. On the inside of the wall about 3 to 4 feet below the outer parapet is a stone walk about 4 feet in width. Here also is the ruins of the old Abbey said to have been partially razed when the Normans captured the city about A. D. 1200. The most impressive object which supports the tower and found same to be 68 feet each. In this building is said to be more than two-thirds of an acre of cathedral glass, and one of the large end windows is 30x80 feet.
Edinburgh is called the "Modern Athens" and many think it superior to Paris as the most beautiful city in Europe. It would take too long for me to write about its wonderful tower rising on a hill fully 400 feet above the city proper, its old Holyrood palace, King's Hill, John Knox house, Robert Burns house and monument, Walter Scott monument, and many other points of historical interest. The principal business houses (retail) are conducted on one side of a street facing across a most beautiful park thro' which runs what we would call in Nebraska a "great deep draw", which is bridged in several places to accommodate the traffic. The buildings rising one above another on the side hill, viewed from the opposite side, creates a beautiful effect. Glasgow is another wonderful commercial center of about a million inhabitants, many of which are connected with its shipping interests. Much of the city is builded on the old style plan of narrow streets through which thro' the great paths of commerce. Belfast and Dublin, the great cities of Ireland, impressed us as being more of the modern type of a city, with nice broad streets—broad for this part of the world, and the complexion of the "colleens" would set aglow the cheek of many of Loup City's young men.
Chester is another and the only other city in England still boasting of its original wall about the city, but it is little more than half the length of the York wall. We started off with a bad dinner at the hotel, so naturally failed to enjoy its walls, castle and cathedral as we should. One of the most enjoyable places of our trip was "Stratford-on-Avon", the home of William Shakespeare and Ann Hathaway, whose houses are eagerly shown at sixpence per, the identical rooms in which they were born, lived and in which happened the historical events so well known to the world, together with the school in which they were educated, the church in which they were worshipped and their final resting place are all points of great interest.
Not only is this little city of 8,000 people noted for the "bard" alone, but here lives Marie Corelli, the authoress, who is now about 50 years of age and lives in a beautiful cottage surrounded by capacious grounds.
We arrived in London Tuesday evening and this is a wonderful city.
If you will imagine a city three times the size of Chicago you will have it.
There are many peculiar things about which I might write, but time forbids. I find common laborers working on the streets averaging 2 shilling (50 cents) per day. A good clerk or bookkeeper is lucky who earns $6 or $6.25 per week, a good farm laborer gets $3 per week. Food and shoes are about the same price here as at home, but clothing and wearing apparel is a great deal less. I am informed that land all over the islands used for agricultural purposes, when sold brings from 30 cents to $1000 per square yard. The country is a veritable garden, all laid out in little fields of from one to ten acres, and surrounded by a nicely trimmed green hedge. The farm houses and stables are brick and in many places are so thick that we would call it a continuous village. A city of less than 50,000 people is considered but a small village and very few of the trains stop. It is wonderful how near together large cities of 50,000 inhabitants are. None of the hotels over here have individual baths or steam heat in the bedrooms. If a fire is wanted a small one will be kindled in a fireplace at from sixpence to a shilling extra. Coffee is served providing you wish to pay sixpence per cup additional to the price of the meal. The service at the hotels, however, is superior to that in America. The tipping evil is very pronounced, and they know an American as quick as they set eyes on him. Well, Burleigh, this is a much longer letter than I had expected to write, but there is lots to say. Regards to all friends, W. R. MELLOR.

Adjudged Insane
Sheriff Williams on Tuesday morning took a woman named Mrs. Stella Werner to the asylum at Hastings.
Her home was near Schauaps, where her children lived, but she has been going hither and thither of late, refusing to stay at home and had rented a room at Ashton where she has been living by herself. Monday morning she appeared at the home and tried to kill the family, attacking them with an axe, which one of her sons took away from her, when she tried other persuasive articles, until she had run the family off the place.
Sheriff Williams on complaint went out and gathered her in, in the commission holding a sitting the same afternoon and adjudged the patient insane. Her husband died some two or three years since.

Small Pox Case
Miss Minnie Gilbert came home last Thursday evening from Tecumseh where she had been working in the interest of the children's home at Omaha. She was taken ill there, the physicians thinking it a case of la grippe, and concluded to come home till she felt better. On arriving home, she went to the home office of Dr. A. S. Main, who found her suffering from the first stages of smallpox and immediately had her transferred to the home of her mother, Mrs. J. A. Gilbert, in Webster township. The family, with the exception of her mother, who has had the disease, were warned by phone and went to the home of Milo Gilbert, where they remain till all danger is passed. It is not thought possible any danger from infection may result.

Photographer Draper was up on Clear Creek and around Lee Park three days last week, taking views along the route of the proposed new railroad from Loup City to Broken Bow, to be presented by the projectors of the new road to Union Pacific officials, to show the country through which the new line would be built, and as an inducement to them to handle any and all shipments which might come over the project after building. It looks as though something tangible was in the air in regard to this much talked of new railroad, which would give the Union Pacific an outlet to the west from this city. We will have more to say about this later.

Without money and without price is the singing of Charles McKinney, the man who sings to beat the band.
Mr. McKinney will positively appear at the noon day concert of Kirsch's King of the Cowpunchers Band and sing in a highly cultivated, rich in melody voice so very powerful as to be heard above the entire instrumentation of this gigantic musical organization. To miss this one gratuitous number is parallel to refusing money as a gift. Take the word of a man who has spent his entire life in travel and who has never slept twice in the same bed since his seventeenth birthday. He says, "I have never heard one half his equal." Kirsch's King of the Cowpunchers is in keeping with the high order of all of Mr. Kirsch's productions. In this small space it is impossible to give a correct outline of all this scenery.
The scenic work is from the studio of Messrs. Lafayette Gould and Wagner, 714-716 Broadway, New York.
Messrs. L. G. and W. design all the scenery for the Academy of Music and the Grand Opera House in New York and the Empire Theatre in Philadelphia. This work is sufficient evidence to satisfy the most exacting that Mr. Kirsch will offer only the best that money can buy for his patrons pleasure. The company will appear in Loup City, Tuesday, May 31.
