THE HOME TOWN

By Nels Barling

As I have stated before, the average western town depends upon its retail stores for its life. It is primarily a trading point. Cripple the retail business and you cripple the community. Destroy the stores and you destroy the town.

There are three classes of people given to patronizing the home merchants only when necessity demands.

There is the fellow who takes a pride in saying that he is independent of the town. He holds mortgages on good farms and owns some bank stock. He buys most of his goods away from home and is the star kicker. He has very little property in the town, but is against every proposed progressive step, fearing that his taxes will be increased one-tenth of one per cent. He is tired and retired. The community will not have lost so much when he is interred.

Then there are those people who buy most of their goods by mail because they have an idea that by so doing they are displaying a laudable independence and are transacting real business. To write out an order, to read the letter acknowledging receipts, to open the package and check the goods with the bill, gives them a feeling of importance. With them, imagined economy is not the main inducement. They love to pour over the catalogs and discuss the different items. These cleverly designed, illustrated and description-illuminated books have for them a strange fascination.

There is still another class of mail order buyers—the folks who have a hard time to make both ends meet. They save money a small part of the time, but keep deceiving themselves that they do all of the time.

These latter folks are often incurable catalog buyers by some unscrupulous store keeper, by discourteous clerks, by coming in to contact with merchants who are not business men. Every place has the dealer who will not compare his prices and merchandise with those of the catalog houses. The mention of a catalog house throws him into a tantrum. This sort of a merchant is a "weak sister."

Any dealer can hold his own with these mail order houses, if he will but have sense enough to know that he must meet competition with quality, price and service.

LINCOLN LETTER

Lincoln, Oct. 5.—The republican campaign work has been in active operation now about five weeks. A large part of the state has already been covered by the candidates, who are working in harmony with each other and with the state committee which has a complete state organization in conjunction with the county organizations that report enthusiasm for the republican cause in every part of the state.

Report from nearly two hundred towns already visited by the republican automobile tour show the voters turning out everywhere and receiving Mr. Howell and the other state candidates with manifestations of respect and confidence. As it appears from the view-point here at Lincoln it can be said without exaggeration that the trend in the state,—in practically all parts of the state, is so decidedly toward Howell and the republican state ticket that the democratic managers of their state campaign are already frightened at the prospect.

With five weeks of the campaigning time already expired and with only about three weeks till the election the democratic state campaign under the state committee has not yet fairly started. Democratic Chairman Thompson, when he found himself crowded out of the campaign management by the anti-Bryan state committees went away to Washington, from which place he returned only a few days ago with the federal patronage deadlock still on and with a month of his time wasted in an effort to harmonize the pie counter factions. Senator Hitchcock, it seems, as fighting leader, of the anti-Bryanites is determined that the "smash the Bryan" program shall be carried out to the last detail whatever happens to Morehead or to Maupin, for the senator's preparations for the contest of 1916 are of more importance to him than the election of Morehead, Maupin or Pool.

In the meantime, every day brings to Lincoln men from over the state, democrats as well as republicans, who report more or less of a revolt against the democratic ticket. The democratic editors, a few of them, are giving faint support to Morehead, but some of them of the Edgar Howard type, are openly denouncing his candidacy as being back by an anti-Bryan conspiracy, which seriously threatens the future of the party in this state. In a double column editorial Mr. Howard's paper, the Columbus Telegram, calls on Governor Morehead to repudiate the anti-Bryan conspiracy or to prepare for his threatened defeat. The compact between Morehead and Maguire hurts both of them in the first congressional district where Morehead's prestige is suffering now perhaps more than in any other part of the state. The strained personal relations between the democratic candidates prevents them from doing team work in the campaign and they are out on the road here and there each one for himself, Morehead refusing to travel with either Maupin or Pool and with the two latter dodging each other for fear of an outbreak of temper and wordy disclosures that might bring both of them into open ridicule. To his friends, the governor confesses his antipathy to Maupin and Pool for what they are and Maupin and Pool censure the governor for what he is not. It is nip and tuck between the in-harmony among these three candidates and the other inharmonies, between Bryan and Hitchcock, between Chairman Thompson and his anti-Bryan committee and the still more far-reaching and more damaging inharmony between the Bryan and anti-Bryan factions that extends itself into every voting precinct of the state. In lieu of the inactive state committee Food Commissioner Harmon, Fire Commissioner Ridgell and others of the governor's appointees are working their office forces at the state house, sending thousands of letters purporting to come from the governor himself, letters that the governor never sees, but letters that are hoped to bring him some sympathy from the recipients. The traveling deputies of the various state house commissions, about forty or fifty of them, are out on the road at the state's expense trying to wake up the county organizations and incidentally making as little trouble as possible for the special interests ever which they are supposed to have supervision.
