REDFIELD WILL RECOMMEND.

Again the word "failure" has been written in bold type across the text of a democratic law.

No less person than Secretary of Commerce Redfield has admitted the necessity for legislation to provide that "unfair competition from abroad" at the close of the war "shall not be permitted to injure American industry." The secretary has announced that in his next annual report to congress he will recommend the enactment of laws to prevent the "dumping" of foreign products into the American market.

Considered in connection with Secretary Redfield's statement, the action of the democratic congress in eliminating the "anti-dumping" clause from the Underwood tariff law assumes the proportions of a colossal blunder.

That the enactment of the Underwood bill would render imperative at least a small measure of protection to American industries was conceded by the ways and means committee when it reported the tariff bill. To provide it the committee recommended an "anti-dumping" clause, declaring in its report that it was to guard the producers of the United States against the demoralization of American markets caused by low priced foreign importations.

The clause provided in substance that upon exported foreign articles not on the free list also manufactured in the United States, a special duty of not to exceed fifteen per cent should be levied whenever the foreign price was less than the far market value at home.

The house passed this provision. The republicans unsuccessfully tried to amend it and then to a man voted for it. The senate finance committee struck it from the bill, and in spite of united republican efforts to amend and restore it, the tariff bill passed the senate without the anti-dumping clause, eventually becoming a law in that form.

The anti-dumping clause thus thrown into the discard by the democrats was very evidently a necessity, the demand for which was acutely emphasized by the passage of the law from which it was finally eliminated.

In recommending anti-dumping legislation now, Secretary Redfield has not merely turned the limelight upon a legislative blunder of his party. He has justified the position of the republicans and virtually championed their cause.

During seven months of the European war ending July, 1915, which period was under the democratic tariff there was imported into the United States $11,240,251 worth of woolen goods, made in foreign factories, as compared with $8,870,101 of such goods imported during the corresponding period in 1913 which was under the republican tariff law. This clearly indicates that English mills are not only busy in supplying their own war demands for woolens, but are producing enough to increase their exports to the United States. The chief items are English cloths and dress goods, which represent over fifty per cent of the total woolen goods coming in during this seven months war period.

During the seven months ending July, 1914, which was the period immediately preceding the outbreak of the war, imports of woolen goods from foreign countries amounted to $29,239,274, representing an increase for this period under the democratic tariff law, over the similar period of 1913, republican law, of about 230 per cent, or an increase of $20,000,000 worth of woolen goods which displaced that amount of goods which should have been made in the mills and factories of the United States, employing American labor.

The United States government for the week ending October 9, 1915, collected a revenue of $3,691,113 on $32,364,630 worth of imports entering the thirteen principal customs districts of this country. This is an average ad valorem rate of duty of 11.4 per cent, which indicates that a large percentage of imports are coming in free, but the cost of living does not decrease. The annual average ad valorem rate of duty during the last year of the republican tariff law was 17.6 per cent, and the republican secretary of the treasury was not forced to the extremity of padding the daily treasury statement in order to make a good showing, which the present secretary is now doing. Labor was universally employed, and American industries were adequately protected.

Notwithstanding the fact that sixty-three per cent of our imports now enter free of duty, the cost of living does not decrease. The New York Times Analyst index number showing average wholesale prices of twenty-five food commodities for the week ending October 16, 1915, is 142.93, compared with 141.6 for the corresponding week of October, 1913, the first month of the democratic tariff, during which month 61 per cent of imports came in free. This does not square with the democratic campaign promise that by means of duty free goods they would lower the cost of living.

If, as some people think, a general tariff revision is undertaken by the next session of Congress, it will be the first time in political history that the same political party, in control of two successive congresses, has done such a thing. It will also be the first time that a political party has had to make confession of its failure as a tariff maker.

The net balance in the federal treasury on October 16 was $116,091,130, this balance having been augmented by inclusion of various items not included prior to October 1. The deficit on that date was $43,473,748.

Uncle Sam and the Central and South American republics are recognizing Carranza and his government, but hanged if we would want to recognize the cuss or any of his horde in a dark alley.

We would like to know which business house you think has the most attractive, appealing and compelling advertisement in this issue of the paper. Why not tell us?

Anybody who doesn't wish the president and his new bride-to-be all kinds of happiness is just a jealous old codger who would like to stand in his shoes.

Just glue your eyes to the ads in this paper and you will not even want to think of going anywhere else to do your Christmas shopping.

Live merchants will be telling you about it in the paper from now on until Christmas. Use your eyes and save the pennies.

Cheer up, old top. It keeps other people busy looking after the droop of their own spirits.

To admit your faults is one of the greatest virtues of all.
