AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Washington, May 24. (Special Correspondence). The democratic policy of postponing embarrassing problems is illustrated in the failure to pass any kind of revenue legislation up to the present time, notwithstanding the depleted condition of the treasury and the certainty that a large increase in expenditures will be an incident of legislation enacted at the present session. "After the convention" is the word that has now gone out in answer to questions as to the time when revenue measures will be taken up. The democrats realize that the storm will break over their heads when they begin to pass the bills that impose additional taxes, and they are putting off the unpleasant task as late as possible in the hope that something will happen to divert public attention or give them some plausible explanation for the levying of direct taxes on the American people instead of taxing the products of the foreigner, as was done under republican administrations.

Last week, President Wilson's week-end trip on the presidential yacht Mayflower extended from Friday until Tuesday instead of Friday until Monday. This was taken as an intimation that both foreign and domestic problems require less of the president's attention than formerly. The usual week-end trip extends from Washington down the Potomac and Chesapeake Bay to Fortress Monroe and Norfolk.

One of the encouraging signs for republicans this year is the small number of contests that will be presented before the National committee at the Chicago convention. Four years ago, several hundred seats were contested. This year there will be only 44 claimed by rival delegations and the issues are purely local, involving no questions that will arouse antagonisms in the committee or in the convention. Four years ago the split in the republican party had its beginning in the fight over contested delegations. This year none of the presidential aspirants nor his friends care anything about the contests.

It is frequently remarked with gratification by republican leaders that there is not the slightest antagonism among the aspirants for the presidential nomination at Chicago. Nothing unkind is being said by one aspirant or his friends against any other candidate. As a consequence, all the defeated aspirants will find it perfectly easy to fall in line in support of the nominee. There will be no hard feelings against the winner, no adverse criticisms for the losing candidates to regret. There has not been in twenty years a campaign so free from personalities as this. All of which is discouraging to the democrats, for they realize that they won through republican dissension in 1912 and stand little chance in 1916 against a solid party.

If reports are true, there will be some far flying around the capitol when the president tries to put over his shipping bill. Already there are rumors of hostility in the democratic camp, and the opponents in his party on this proposition are making no bones of saying that this present policy of the administration will meet the same fate as the Philippine bill, if he is depending on democratic votes to put it over.

A democratic member of the house, disgusted with the way things are moving along, says that congress is not "marking time," but is absolutely wasting time. "Why," he said, "we are not even doing as much as 'marking time.'"

A prominent republican from West Virginia, who visited the capitol since the recent congressional election in the second district said: "We shall elect a solid republican delegation to congress from our state. What happened the other day is a forerunner of what is coming. We shall also elect a republican United States senator and our state ticket. West Virginia republicans are united and they are for progress, protection and prosperity."

WHAT IS WISEST?

A progressive editor, writing in Collier's Weekly says it is reported that Senator Penrose is willing to accept the Roosevelt candidacy if that should be the wisest thing politically. We do not doubt that this is true. In fact, the statement is axiomatic. Mr. Penrose has no monopoly of such an opinion. All republicans hold it to

We all want to do the wisest thing at Chicago.

Nobody now can tell what the wisest thing is. A dozen honorable and able men will strive for the Chicago nomination. Anyone of them is worthy of it, but who will assert, a fortnight before the convention meets, that this, that or the other man is the wisest choice? There has been no consultation among the men who must make the nomination. Very few state delegations, even, have met for conference.

Therefore, it seems to us, that the wisest thing politically is to wait until the convention assembles, to hear then the reasons why the partisans of the various candidates think their man is the best to choose, to weigh the probabilities of the campaign which will follow, to adjust such differences as may appear, and then to nominate the man who appears most likely to attract all the voting elements which are opposed to the continuance of democratic rule.

Washington is whispering that the Brandeis nomination may be withdrawn from the senate and that Samuel Untermyer of New York will be named for the vacancy which now exists on the bench of the supreme court. The president is said to believe that the senate will hardly reject two court nominees in succession, thus recognizing that objection will be made to Untermyer in almost as active a form as in Brandeis case. The president, as a historian, must be aware, however, that two successive refusals to confirm judges are not without precedent. In 1893 President Cleveland tried in vain to put William B. Hornblower on the supreme court and when that nomination failed, he tried, with equal failure, to give the place to Wheeler H. Peckham. When the latter was rejected, Mr. Cleveland named Edward D. White of Louisiana, then a senator, and now the Chief Justice. For a scholar in politics, Mr. Wilson is frequently very dull regarding historical precedents. But there is one precedent, however, which will shortly be called to his mind very forcibly, the precedent that no democrat has succeeded himself in the presidency since the republican party came into being. Recurring to Untermyer, it must be admitted that there are many strong personal reasons why Mr. Wilson should be eager to recognize him.
