Looking Ahead

By Laura Lee (your secret pal)

For the past few weeks our attention has been called to the greater interest in education. There seem to be more students both young and old than ever before. Most of our elementary, secondary and schools of higher learning are packed to capacity. Those who did not complete their high school work are now going to adult, day, and evening classes.

Children under 16 are compelled by the state law to attend school but what attraction does the schoolroom have for older students? Many veterans and their wives are working and going to school. Why are these couples making this sacrifice?

Many of our boys in army service could have served their country in more pleasant positions had they finished at least four years in High School. Some could neither read nor write. This illiteracy not only prevented their progress while in the army but also kept them on jobs in civilian life that were difficult and menial. In many cases these jobs provided a mere existence financially.

Today we must all look forward to the time when positions will not be so plentiful and when only preparation, good moral character and efficiency will be the means of securing and retaining those worthwhile positions which enable us to reach a higher standard of living.

Congratulations to
