HATS: American & Paris Styles

Having never liked hats very much, I suppose I can't say too much about them; but knowing that one is not well dressed without a hat or head piece, I decided to probe into the matter a little.

From the American point of view, hats are small and sets on the back of the head with most of the interest in the back. Lovely bunches of flowers or beautiful satin or velvet ribbons or bows decorates the back. Even poke bonnets with all their splendor are in style.

Gloves, ascot, and head pieces to match are also popular, and very stunning, most of these are easily made.

In spite of the great American designers, Paris designers tend to oppose them somewhat with their hat styles—their hats are wide—styled so as to demand a hair style that covers the ears. They are pretty and quite different. Paris also has small hats; tiny pill boxes tied on with bands of tulle or chiffon.

I shall mention the names of a few designers as it might help you when you go to buy a hat—American designers, Lilly Dache, John Frederics, Madame Reine, and Hattie Carnegie. Paris designers, Henri Bendel, Paulette, Maud et Nano, and Aubry.
