What Have You Done Today?

1. Just how did you start off your part of the World today; did you say any way you chanced to live, it would move along some way?
2. That then would be really and perfectly true, if nobody cared and did just like you.
3. It would certainly be a miserable place in which to live if you avoided me and I avoided you, for fear of something we would have to give.
4. Yet this sort of practice for the most part, in our land has subtly been gaining ground, until now real friendship among men is seldom to be found.
6. Is it not quite time, despite world could be beautiful, comfortable and warm, we withhold sincerity and kindness, and allow it to become cold and torn.
6. It is not quite time, despite what daily we see, for all honest-to-goodness men and women to work longer and press harder to set this old world free?
7. She is suffering from a terrible complication of avarice, hate and deceit, and no head trained, heart drained, nor Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde can this sore malady defeat.
8. With that high fever she running within that well shaped body, but double face, no quacks to her must administer, but alone possessors of God's amazing Grace.

9. Could you answer such a call this moment and give strength where weakness abides; could you restore chords that were broken, and bring light where darkness now hides?

10. Such a one cannot afford to be idle, there is so much for such hands to do, in this world so diseased with hypocrisy and honest men and women so few.

11. Won't you then bravely enlist in this army-your fighting front is right at your door; here are the wounded and dying all about you—for a wider and more profitable field, could you ask more?

12. Kind friend, this is your day and opportunity to look at God with an appreciative face; if you will use just a part of what He gave you, you will love Him, and with Him all mankind lovingly embrace.
