Chicago Miracle

(Continued from Page 1) A young woman has a reputation in the neighborhood in which she was found. She lived in a hotel nearby and a few days earlier had been arrested for attacking her husband with a knife.

At the time she was picked up she was wearing only a short spring coat, sweater, skirt, stockings, slip and galoshes. Police retrace the scene. However, hospital officials have not made a statement on whether or not the woman had been drinking. Her husband is an unemployed junkman.

The young woman's recovery from a 64 degree temperature is still an amazement in the medical world. The lowest temperature at which a person has survived has been 75. Dr. Harold Laufman, Northwestern university surgeon who is in charge of the case, stated during the week medical men from throughout Chicago and surrounding towns have visited Mrs. Stevens' room. Many in more distant places have called to get information on her condition.

Scientists hope a careful recording of the case will lead to successful operations for low pumping hearts with the patient being in a deep-freeze condition. With wear and tear on tissues stopped, they point out there would be little demand for blood in the body. In such a condition the tissue metabolism (use of food and oxygen) would be reduced to where a trickling of blood would be adequate.

Formerly one danger of such an operation has been the possibility of the brain being damaged because of lack of oxygen. Mrs. Stevens' case has proved the brain and kidneys can return to normal functionings unharmed.

Other scientists are discussing the treatment which might be used on soldiers suffering from frostbites and deep-freezing in the Korean war and future Arctic wars.

Prior to World War II, Dr. Frederick Nelson, Sr., of Ottumwa, Ia., attempted to prove cancer growth could be halted through freezing treatments. In many cases cold temperature has been used in place of shock therapy for mental patients. High imaginative writers have often written stories of the process of freezing people into suspended animation to be thawed back into consciousness generations later. One scientist has deemed it possible to freeze human sperms capable of conceiving new lives many years after the begetter is dead.
