Go vest, young man.

Invest in a vest is the best possible advice that one can give to smart young men who like to be "in the know" fashionwise. Speaking in the know, I might say that I discovered the popularity of the vest quiet by accident.

A young co-ed called me frantically some few days before Christmas. Seems she had started making her boy friend a present for the season, and had become apprehensive lest her sewing have that "home made" look, so she called me to come to the rescue.

I asked her what she was making and learned that she was making a vest. I was a bit taken aback, for I had remembered the vest as the third piece in a man's suit—matching, of course. When she told me the thing was white velvet, well, I decided that I had better do a little research.

Being a woman, it is only natural that the interest would concentrate on women's fashions for the most part, but I did not realize how dated my data on men's clothes really is. When I did a bit of shopping around, I found that not only are there vests on the market, but the colors are so bright and gay they would make Joseph's coat look like a mourning robe.

And what is more, the boys are wearing the things. Even more surprising — they look quite nice when seen just as a tiny bit of color peeking from underneath a coat front.

There were some bright little Scotch plaid numbers, as well as the bold solid colors. There was even a bright red silk antique satin one. I suppose that Man is finally beginning to rebel against the fact that he is the only male in the animal kingdom that is less fancily dressed than the female.

Fortunately, he has the good sense to take the fancy dress and bold colors in small doses and one item at the time. First there were the gay sports shirts, and just about the time we got used to the idea of having competition for the color of blouses — the color promptly took a nose dive and came out in the form of bright Argyle socks, or some reasonable or unreasonable facsimile thereof. Now it is the vest that is the focal point.

So if you are young and have a flair for the dramatic, our advice is "Go vest, young man."

1 9-inch baked pastry shell

"Say,— maybe I'm missing some calls"

That's likely when you're making one call right after another. No one can call you. And on a party line all the other phones register a "busy" signal, too. So please space out your calls. Then you won't be missing incoming calls... and your party-line neighbors will be served as well.

The Bowling Mart, located at 2230 R Street is owned and operated by Mrs. Charles Bowling.

The Dairy Mart, specializes in hot savory meals. Their menus vary from day to day. Other features are dairy products, groceries, ice cream and cigarettes. A new feature to be added will be a newspaper rack. This is an added convenience because there are no news dealers within a 4 block radius.

Congratulations Mrs. Bowling for having foresight in putting your customers convenience in your plans. You've come a long way progressively since your opening on August 15, 1952.

was the top presentation on Christmas Day.

Alvin Childress came into his own on the "Amos and Andy" show reciting and commenting on the "Lord's Prayer" for his eldest daughter. This was the highlight of the show—and could well have been presented on any other program. But the recitation in the simple language, explaining each passage of the prayer repeated more than any other since its original presentation, was certainly a fitting tribute to "The Day." Childress and the "Amos and Andy" cast acquitted themselves well in this instance.
