Etta Moten Thrills AKA Gathering

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Newspaper reports were high in their praise of Miss Etta Moten, noted singer, in her performance as the featured attraction in the fifth annual Fashionetta sponsored by Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority in Robinson Auditorium here.

Miss Moten served last week as narrator, commentator, guest model and soloist. The former star of the stage production of "Porgy and Bess" sang several numbers and modeled four costumes.

Among her songs were a group of popular type numbers, "Summertime," "How Deep Is the Ocean," and "Begin the Beguine," in which the audience revelled.

The annual Fashionetta is a scholarship benefit show, sponsored by Beta Pi Omega chapter of AKA. Four scholarships are given each year, one each to the four colleges of Greater Little Rock.

Besides the scholarships given, the benefit show defrays the expense of the AKA summer playground for children.

One of the highlights of the program in the packed auditorium was the crowning of "Miss Fashionetta," "Miss Junior Fashionetta," "Little Miss Fashionetta," and "Miss Future Fashionetta."

In commenting on Miss Moten's appearance at the affair, Miss Gwendolyn M. Floyd, columnist of the Little Rock State Press, said in part:

"The audience sat thrilled as she (Miss Moten) unfolded the various scenes of the program."

Shumpert Logan NU Graduate

The recent death of Mrs. Sarah Washington Logan, founder and owner of the Apex Hair and News Company, Atlantic City, New Jersey, has put the spotlight on her husband, Shumpert Logan.

Mr. Logan is well known to many Lincolnites, having graduated from the University of Nebraska here in 1928.

The reading of Mrs. Logan's will revealed that she left the bulk of her estate, estimated valuation over a million dollars, to an adopted daughter, Mrs. Joan Washington Hayes.

Mrs. Hayes was given 51 per

You Are the Detective

You enter the law offices of Jacob Bauer, and find the wealthy attorney sprawled back in his leather-upholstered swivel chair, a bullet hole in his chest. You turn to Carl Reed, junior member of Bauer's firm, who phoned you fifteen minutes ago of the tragedy.

"I knew Mr. Bauer was alone in his office tonight, and wanting to discuss some personal problems with him, I came here to see him.

"I... I found him like this." "Have you touched or moved anything?" you ask.

"No—only the telephone when I called you."

You begin an examination of Bauer's desk and immediately find the typewritten letter, with its hastily-scrawled penciled signature: "I've thought this out carefully and am sure this is the only way out. Life is just too much for me."

A further examination of the desk shows nothing of special interest—just some blank letterheads, a tray of paper clips, an uncapped inkwell, some loose postage stamps, and some bills. As you stop beside the dead man to pick up the gun lying on the floor beside him you notice the pen still clutched tightly in his right hand. A quick look at the gun tells you it has been fired recently, and a further examination shows no fingerprints.

"Did Mr. Bauer give any signs of mental depression recently?" you ask Reed.

"Not that I know of," replies the young man. "Of course, he always did seem preoccupied and worried during the year I have been associated with him, but he gave no intimation that he was going to kill himself."

Reports have it that most of the real estate was in the name of the Apex News and Hair Company. If such is the case, then the real estate actually owned by Mrs. Logan was controlled by the stock which under the law is considered personal.

"As a matter of fact," you say, "Bauer did not kill himself. He was murdered, and maybe you know a little more about it than you've already told me. There are four little inconsistencies here that have aroused my suspicions!"

Mr. Logan was a Lincoln visitor during October of 1952.

What are those "four little inconsistencies?"

Solution

In the first place, the signature on the typewritten note was scrawled in pencil, but the dead man clutches a pen in his right hand. Secondly, why is he still holding a pen when his last living acts supposedly was with a gun. Thirdly, a would-be suicide doesn't usually shoot himself in the chest, which is uncertain, but usually in the temple. And fourth, there were no fingerprints on the gun, leading you to believe that the murderer was overly-cautious.
