ORATORY

Its Requirements and its Rewards.

By JOHN P. ALTGELD

A little volume designed for the assistance of public speakers, but it contains so much that is useful to every student and patriot that it ought to be in every library. It not only gives valuable instruction as to the preparation and delivery of a speech, but, what is still more important, it gives to the reader higher ideals and a better understanding of the source of eloquence.

All Three Great Weeklies Only $2.00 Per Year

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION,

The great Southern Weekly, has the widest circulation of any weekly newspaper published in the United States. It deserves this eminent place because of its general excellence. Every issue reflects the whole world's happenings for the week. Correspondents from every center, nook and corner of the whole South contribute all the news that is worth the telling. Bill Arp and Sarge Plunkett give their columns of quaint philosophy and homespun wisdom every week. The Woman's Kingdom brings much pleasure to the home through the interchange of thought from the letters of the sisters from all sections. The Constitution, Jr., affords entertainment to its thousands of school children who send their spicy and homely letters to Aunt Susie. The Farm Department is edited by Col. R. J. Redding, director of Georgia Experiment Station, a scientific, practical man of national reputation. All the special features and regular departments are the best. The Constitution is the democratic paper of the whole South. It has always supported the democratic nominee and urged the principles as outlined in the party platform. In 1896 and 1900 the Constitution's leadership of the people for Wm. J. Bryan was known and felt throughout its whole wide territory. In season and out of season, its clear-cut editorials ring out plainly its wholesome, timely appeals against wrong and for the right in all things. A 12-page weekly newspaper Only $1.00 Per Year.

THE SUNNY SOUTH,

The South's Great Literary Weekly, full of everything good to read. Serial and short stories, poems, continued stories, sketches of travel and adventure, war recollections, biography, science, history, romance, literature, fact and fiction, will fill its readable columns. The paper has a distinctive Southern flavor, and, as the name implies, there comes from it an odor of the magnolia and the bay, the palmetto and the pine, the jessamine and the honeysuckle, that intertwine near the fields where the cotton whitens and the tall sugarcane sweetens beneath a radiant sun. Southern romances are softest and most thrilling, whether of the day when the planter dreamed as he presided over his almost ducal estate, or now when the hum of factory and the buzz of active industry make music under the hands of the sons of the South leading the triumphant progress that pulses everywhere. A Great Southern Literary Magazine only 50c per year.
