Immediately upon the passage of the bill awarding the printing contract to the Times the good government league began an agitation for the recall of the six aldermen who constituted a majority of the council and whose acts in the matter of granting franchises, had been unsatisfectory for months. Councilman J. P. Davenport of the sixth ward-the workingman's ward, and the worst sufferer at the hands of the "Big Six"-was selected as the first to be called.

Following the provisions of the charter a petition was started, the minimum number of signatures of which must be 25 per cent of the voters of the ward. Within two weeks it bore 1,300 signatures out of 2,864 votes cast at the previous election. This petition was presented to the city clerk for the certification of the names it bore. It was checked against the city directory by that official and was thrown out for the reason that many of the addresses placed opposite the names did not tally with the directory.

Another petition was started. Other charges were added and the second document received more signatures than the first. After a similar process of elimination it was found to contain upward of 900 authenticated names.

The Sacred Elephant.

An election was accordingly ordered by the council. Davenport sought to prevent this by suit for injunction, but lost the case, Judge Oster of the superior court sustaining the recall petition, thus clearing the way for an election.

The fight thereafter was a hot one, Councilman Davenport invoking the aid of the salogn element to secure his re-election. The election was held and resulted in the ratification of the recall, Davenport being defeated by a vote of two to one. -Press Dispatch.
