A Long and Bitter Fight

The following editorial appeared in the Albuquerque (New Mexico) Tribune-Citizen:

"When the country is livid with revolt against industrial piracy in governmental affairs and when disruption and dissolution have set in against the great political party that sold its soul to monopoly we hear from the press of the country too little credit given to the man of all men responsible for things as they are.

"William Jennings Bryan, the man of many battles and many outward defeats, has reason to be the proudest and happiest man in the United States today. For he is now seeing the fruition of a work that in the earlier days of its undertaking was hooted at, scored and mocked by many of the forces that are today allied in the battle that he so ably began.

"Mr. Bryan can not help but feel flattered at the almost universal acceptance of the political religion to which he made undisputed sacrifices to champion. He gave himself over to the commands of the fighting hosts against the giants of privilege when there was small chance of success. The Tribune Citizen is not now and has never been among those who have thought Mr. Bryan a candidate for the presidency because he could win. We have believed and still believed that the Nebraskan went into battle when he more than anyone feared that defeat would meet the cause for which he fought. We believe that when he accepted the nomination for the president he was fully cognizant of the power of the enemy and we believe that he was willing if need be to go down to defeat as a candidate if by so doing he could lead the masses against predatory wealth in a good fight that in the future would count for better things.

"And the fights he has made have counted. They have counted marvelously. They have awakened a nation. They have smote the conscience of the people and they have aroused the lion of American independence to resent the invasion of industrial tyranny until today the fights he has made have placed victory within the reach of other hands than his.

"When, in 1896, the young thinker and orator of Nebraska sounded the alarm against the anarchy of money and predatory wealth he brought down upon his head the curses of the money changers, the eminently respectable thieves of high station, the corruptionists in congress and the captains of industry at the counting tables. But he was hailed by the new spirit of America—by the new nationalism of that day, if you please—as a savior. And the fight he made, judged in the light of subsequent events, was a wonderful fight. His note sounded true. It reached home. And while the power of the great combinations and the robbers of public property sent him down to defeat the struggle brought with it its own reward in what was to come.

"So it was again in 1900, when the struggle was renewed with even greater intensity than before. Again it took the herculean efforts of the entrenched hogs of big business to stem the tide that arose with renewed strength against Hannalism and sleek standpatism. Outwardly the battle was again lost. But that the tide could not be stemmed until the goal of the new movement was achieved was signally demonstrated in the next national election when the democracy itself voted down a candidate chosen by Wall Street as the choice of the democratic party.

"No assertion of the Nebraskan as to the danger of the power of predatory wealth to American institutions has given the proof of this danger so well as the history that was made in the campaigns of 1896, 1900 and 1908. Unbiased historians will record that Mr. Bryan was the overwhelming choice of the American people in three elections, but that the use of money, coercion and intimidation defeated their will. What was suspected in 1896 was proved in 1900 and what was proved in 1900 was made universal knowledge in the choice of Judge Taft in 1908. Never had the corporations so openly conducted a campaign, never had they so openly posted notices in the mills, the mines and the factories that the man who voted against the choice of the financial bandits would be thrown out of employment to face hungry loved ones.

"But during all of the combats of the people against entrenched privilege the battle cry, 'Equal rights to all; special privilege to none,' and the question, 'Shall the people rule?' have served their purpose well. These have continued to speed to the hearts of the people long after the smoke of temporary struggle cleared away. And in the year 1910 they are still the slogans of the old nationalism made new.

"And now the battering that was done at the door of privilege is beginning to have its effect. The hinges are beginning to weaken and the panels are beginning to shake. Men who, when the fight began, either stood aside idle or scoffed at the crusaders have taken up the battering rams themselves and the whole people are today making the assault at the same citadel which repelled the attacks made before.

"It has been a long and a bitter fight. The leader of the leaders has been subjected to abuse such as has been showered on the head of no other public man in the country's history. But he stands vindicated. He has reason to smile. His fight has been won. And whether he shall ever enjoy the rewards from an appreciative people that are so often delayed in the cause of reform or whether he shall yet lead again when triumph is sure, he will at least know that he has not fought in vain and that the people who loved and followed him have not followed in vain."

Slipped His Mind

A Perthshire farmer on his way home from market one day suddenly remembered that he had forgotten something, but what he could not recall.

As he neared home the conviction increased and three times he stopped his horse and went carefully through his pocket-book in the vain endeavor to discover what he had missed. In due course he reached home and was met by his daughter, who looked at him in surprise and asked:

"Why, father, what have you done with mother?"—M. A. P.

CAPTURED

Sandy was having his first taste of life in the African forests. Borrowing a gun, he set off one day in search of game. A little later his companion spied in the distance Sandy running at full speed for home, with a huge lion behind him, gaining at every step. "Quick! Quick! Jock!" he cried. "Open the door. I'm bringing him home alive."—Auckland Weekly News.

SCIENTIFIC INQUIRY

"I don't know what to make of my nephew George," remarked the elderly professor. "He has such queer contradictory tastes in music."

"Yes?"
"Yes; I came upon him a little while ago and he was whistling in a dreamy, rapt sort of way the wedding march from 'Lohengrin.' As soon as he saw me he looked confused and changed it at once to 'Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?'"—Chicago Tribune.

A GENEROUS GIFT

"You may say what you like against young ministers, but I have nothing but praise for our young pastor," the pompous Mr. Brown remarked, as he passed out of the church. "Nothing but praise!"

"So I observed," dryly retorted the deacon who had passed the plate.—Harper's.

HELD UP

"Hands up!" exclaimed the western train robber. "Gimme your money."

"Too late," replied the tourist. "I get off at the next station and I've already tipped the porter."—Philadelphia Record.
