THE GAMBLING SPIRIT

Bishop Charles D. Williams, of Michigan, preached at the Lenten service in St. Stephens Episcopal church upon the sin of gambling. He leveled the shafts of his oratory particularly at stock market gambling and the more genteel form the passion takes at the whist bridge tables conducted by women of social prominence. The bishop said:

"Did you ever examine this sin of gambling and betting? The chief evil does not lie in getting something for nothing, but in this—that gambling destroys the will. The will is given to us to control circumstances and to be masters of our fate, but gambling and all transactions of a similar kind breaks down the will by want of healthy exercise; so the surrender of your personalities and the surrender of your will is the result of gambling in whatever form.

"I would speak of the subtler sin of gambling, of betting that is prevalent today from Wall Street to ladies' bridge whist tables. It is the willingness, nay desire, to get something for nothing.

"No more degraded human beings exist than the moral derelicts that float about these gambling places, be they high or low."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

PREFERABLE

The old saw says: "Let a sleeping dog lie." Right, when there is much at stake, it is better to get a newspaper to do it.—The Lutheran.

HOPELESS

Mother—"What are you doing, Harry?"

Harry—"I'm countin'. You told me when I got mad to count a hundred."

Mother—"Yes, so I did."

Harry—"Well, I've counted 237 and I'm madder'n when I started."—Harper's.

NO DOUBT ABOUT IT
