

the national campaign in order to select the president who will appoint the board that the trusts desire.

I am willing to go down on my knees at morning and say to my Heavenly Father: "Give us this day our daily bread," but God forbid that we should make the toiling millions of this country go down on their knees at morning and say to a few trust magnates: "Give us this day our daily bread," and have the trust magnates answer: "Well, if you vote the right ticket, the ticket we want you to and enable us to elect the man we want elected, we will give it to you."

But, my friends, there is a greater objection than I have already made, and I want now to make it. That is the objection to a third term, and nobody can accuse me of manufacturing an objection to fit this case.

Eighteen years ago, when I was a young man, a member of congress, I introduced a resolution submitting an amendment, limiting the president to a single term in office. Three times, when I was a candidate for office, I announced immediately after my nomination that if I was elected I would not be a candidate for a second term, and if I could put this restriction against myself when there was no tradition to prevent and no law to hinder I can protest against three terms for Mr. Roosevelt, or any other man. What has he done to deserve an honor greater than was given to Washington or Jefferson or Jackson, and an honor which Grant could not get when he asked it? What are you going to reward him for? Is there some man who wants to tell me? Is there a Roosevelt man here who is prepared to answer?

My friends, are you going to reward Mr. Roosevelt with a third term for giving us Mr. Taft for a single term? Are you going to reward him for allowing the steel trust to take seven hundred millions out of the pockets of the nation? Is that a reason for your putting upon his brow laurels that were never placed upon the brows of the patriots of the early ages?

Against Mr. Taft who has been weighed in the balance and found wanting, against Mr. Roosevelt, who gave us Mr. Taft, in the place of Mr. Roosevelt, who asked for a third term, and will not state how many more terms he thinks a president ought to have—in place of these two, I present to you our candidate for president, on the Baltimore platform.

It is a better platform than I ever ran upon; it is the most progressive platform that this country has ever seen; it takes the people's side on every national reform on which they are ready to act. We present this man, a man of intelligence; you can not doubt that he is intellectually qualified for the position; a man whose heart is on the people's side, and a man who has the courage to stand unafraid in the presence of the influences that have overawed our chief executives.

This man took the democratic party in old corporation ridden New Jersey, and in two years he has made it as progressive as the democratic party is. We present him, not only qualified in every way, but we present him pledged to a single term, that he may be your president, and spend no time dividing patronage in order to secure delegates; that he need spend no time in planning for re-election; that he may give you all his thought and all his heart and all his energy; I believe that when a man is lifted by his countrymen to this pinnacle of power he ought to tear from his heart every bit of ambition, and on his bended knees consecrate his term to his country's service. That is our ideal president, and we present you a man who measures up to that ideal.

And now let me present a personal appeal. I appreciate the loyalty that these democrats in Indiana have shown. I do not know of a state outside of Nebraska—and I am not sure that I need except Nebraska—I do not know of a state where the democrats have been more loyal to me than they have been in Indiana. I come, therefore, not afraid to speak to them.

In three campaigns I was your candidate, in three campaigns I cherished the hope that I would be the one who, in the providence of God, would lead the nation out of bondage to Wall street and make it free. I thought that I was going to write my name among the immortals by being the people's president. But fate did not so decree, and now the standard is in the hands of another, and, my friends, I fight as earnestly under his banner as I ever fought when I marched at the head of the column and was the captain of the militant hosts of democracy.

I appeal to you to join with us in electing Wilson and Marshall, and then give us a senate and house in harmony with the president, and I believe that we will not only take this government out of the hands of the plunderers, and make it a government of the people, by the people and for the people, but I believe that in four years we will enact laws which are necessary to make it impossible for these men to take this government from the hands of the people, and we can then proceed with the enactment of laws necessary to the best interests and welfare of the nation.

News of the Week

Public sentiment in Chicago has been greatly stirred against Jack Johnson, the negro prize fighter. He is charged with having decoyed a young white girl from Minneapolis. The federal officials have taken charge of the case and many men in sporting circles have withdrawn their support from him.

A cablegram from Paris, carried by the United Press, said: That diplomats believe the Balkan war will practically be settled by the battle expected within a few days between Turks and Bulgarians in the vicinity of Adrianople, was confirmed here on high authority.

If the Turks are defeated, it was said, their power may be considered finally broken. If they are victorious, on the other hand, it was predicted that Servia and Greece, as well as Bulgaria, will be more than willing to stop fighting since they can not hope to succeed where their more powerful ally has been vanquished. The irresponsible and turbulent Montenegrins, it was agreed, may not be so easily satisfied, but alone they are not considered very seriously.

With a view to this contingency, informal negotiations were in progress, it was said, by the cancellories of the powers, looking toward an immediate effort following the impending battle, whatever its outcome, to induce the combatants to accept moderate terms and end the conflict.

Governor Marshall of Indiana ordered the state militia to take charge of race tracks in order to prevent race track gambling.

Norman Hapgood, for many years editor of Collier's Weekly, has retired from that position.

William Rugh, the Gary newsboy who gave up his leg in order to save the life of a young girl, died before leaving the hospital. The New York Evening Post says: Not many can have read without a pang of true and keen sympathy of the death of William Rugh, the Gary newsboy who risked and lost his life to save that of a young girl whom he had never seen. One is at a loss to say whether the pathos, the chivalry, and the self-sacrifice of his act are more moving because of its unusual nature, or because of the feeling that it is typical of the quiet heroism which is to be found in thousands of men in the humblest walks of life. Hardly a railroad disaster, a perilous fire, an accident on the water, but furnishes its tale of instant courage and self-forgetfulness. But there is something peculiarly touching in this quiet and undramatic sacrifice in the Gary hospital. The girl had suffered extensive burns through an explosion of gasoline in a motorcycle. When Rugh, a newsboy with a crippled leg, heard of this, and that only by the grafting of a large amount of cuticle could the girl's life be saved, he offered his crippled leg for amputation. He was warned that the operation might result fatally. "What's the odds," he said, "if it will only save her life? The leg is no good to me, and I have no friends to worry in case I die. Go ahead and cut it off." No heroics in it at all; but many a less knightly act has been embalmed in a hundred poems.

All business in Gary, Ind., was suspended during the funeral of Billy Rugh. Four bands were in the funeral procession. Six uniformed policemen were pall bearers. The mayor and city councilmen and men and women generally bared their heads in honor of the young hero.

Senator La Follette, in a speech delivered at La Crosse, said he would not vote for either Taft, Roosevelt or Wilson.

Governor Marshall, speaking at San Francisco, declared in favor of Chinese exclusion.

Former Senator R. F. Pettigrew again announces that he has once more abandoned the democratic party. He lives in South Dakota.

Many Greeks are leaving America to embark for their native land in order to take up arms against the Turks.

Robert Barr, the Scotch novelist, is dead.

Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, of Portland, Me., was re-elected president of the National W. C. T. U., in session at Portland, Oregon.

Police Lieutenant Becker was found guilty of murder in the first degree at New York. A notice of appeal was given, and Becker was remanded for sentence to the Tombs by Justice Goff until October 30.

Colonel Roosevelt is rapidly recovering from the effects of the bullet wound received at Milwaukee October 14. He addressed a meeting at Madison Square Garden October 30, and will deliver his final address of the campaign at Oyster Bay on election eve.

Suit in behalf of Colonel Roosevelt has been started against a Michigan editor for alleged libel.

The swiftness of the Balkan allies' attack on Turkey and their success is amazing to Europe.

The battleship New York, the greatest warship in the American navy, was launched at New York, October 30.

James S. Sherman, vice president of the United States, is seriously ill and steadily failing at his home in Utica, N. Y. His condition is pronounced serious by his physicians.
