LIQUOR BATTLE HITS ENGLAND

A London dispatch, dated July 29, says: Plymouth is proud of her American born members of parliament but American born ideas about liquor are likely to result in opposition to Lady Astor when the next contest in a parliamentary election for the southern division of Plymouth takes place.

Since her return from her recent American tour, Lady Astor has announced that she favored local option, with the result that from the southwest comes the news that a large section of the conservative party is strongly of the opinion that conservatism should not be allied in any form with prohibition. A prominent opponent to Lady Astor is being sought by this section, it was said.

England is gradually lining up for and against liquor in a fight which is everywhere considered inevitable in the next decade. America is held up either as a horrible example or a glorious model, according to the viewpoint taken.

All the societies and organizations which featured the American prohibition campaign have their counterparts in England. But in the women's auxiliary league, an organization composed of women saloon keepers or wives of licensees, there is a new note.

"Woman's refining influence is nowhere so acutely felt as behind the saloon bar," says Mrs. Gladis Marshall, recently speaking for the 1,100 members of the organization who have taken up the fight to keep the age old institution of the rosy cheeked English barmaid from going into the discard. It is the league's purpose to preserve the latter institution and not permit it to suffer the fate of its masculine white-aproned prototype across the Atlantic. The league's platform is resistance to prohibition, uniform hours and reduced prices for drinks.
