ANOTHER SCRAP OF PAPER.

Our valorous editors are so busy pouring journalistic liquid fire upon German trenches that scarcely a line and no comment at all has been given to the British Orders in Council of February 17. And yet all that has gone before in this behalf is tame and innocuous when compared to this order. It absolutely prohibits all neutrals from trading with the entente powers at all. But it does not stop there. It prohibits sending cargoes of any description to neutral ports of countries lying contiguous to the territory of Germany or her allies, unless the ships enter a British port for examination. And if upon such examination the cargoes shall be found to contain "anything that might be useful to Germany and her allies" then the whole cargo shall be confiscated by a prize court. In other words England has forbidden as even to attempt to trade not only with those countries with whom she is at peace and we are at peace provided by any possibility what we want to sell might find its way into Germany! England and the United States signed the Hague convention, which declared the rights of neutrals to trade with belligerents in all things except contraband of war, defined as arms, munitions, and military stores. England now tears up that scrap of paper and says to us not only that we shall not trade with Germany at all but if we attempt to make any shipments whatsoever to Norway, Sweden, Denmark or Holland that British cruisers shall seize our cargoes and British prize courts shall confiscate them. This is exactly what it means for her definition of anything that may be useful to her enemies, of course, covers practically everything. Now in all candor and justice we ask what is the difference between our commerce being driven from the seas by German submarines and being hauled off the ocean by British battleships and English prize courts? If we are ready to go to war with Germany because she says her blockade is effective and we therefore shall not trade with England what are we going to do when England says we shall not trade with Holland and the Scandinavian countries with whom she is at peace? If Germany's submarine warfare violates our rights in the ocean what does England's latest order in council do? Is there any difference between having a load of shells consigned to London sunk by a German submarine and a cargo of hay for Christmas hauled into port by a battleship and confiscated, and if so is not the difference that constitutes the wrong altogether against England? Then if this is so why are we searching so diligently to enforce the rule against Germany while we are paying no attention whatever to the outrages perpetrated upon us by the allies and have not even mentioned this last outrageous order in council which for sheer tyranny upon the high seas goes far beyond anything Germany has so far attempted? Are the interests in this country clamoring for war with Germany so thoroughly un-American that they are determined that we shall surrender every right upon the high seas and let the German merchant fleet run free? Do we find it unbearable when Ger-
