PARTY STRIFE.

In every land illuminated by the rays civilization or enveloped by impenetrable darkness there exists to some degree what is known as party strife. Where is the commumity, however small, entirely free from it?-Even in the family circle it sometimes prevails to a painfully alarming extent, bringing sadness and sorrow to many a hearth-stone.

But of the political strife which exists is our land we design writing. We are no partizan, yet we feel an interest, a deep interest in any measure fraught with good to the people of the land, mattering not who advocates or who opposes it. When any party, combination or society teach a doctrine or doctrines joimical to the "supreme powers" that rule curvilege of denunciation. We believe we have this right and intend using it. On the other hand, we shall alw ys defend, uphold and sustain the party which abides by and respects

No one can be insensible of the result which must follow if party strife is allowed full sway. It must be restrained, or we may witness a separation of our Union-an event to be lamented as the saddest in the annals of nations. Let all who feel a devotion for this "Union of States" put down, quell political agitation and strife, and we then will have no fears of dis-

There is a certain party, not worth naming, which is a reproach to our country, from the fact its members are led on by nothing else in God's world but the wildest kind of delusion. They care not for the good of the nationtheir idolized, worshipful hobby is more sacred than the peace and happiness of ten thousand worlds. May the time hasten when all such parties will be frowned down by the people of the United States and the last one of them made to suffer the tortures of eternal infamy. Those who were conversant with the strife attending the late national election could not have helped noticing the reckless disregard for the quietness of the nation, everywhere; it blaze, and the fetheral authority and powers were impotent. And this, the sole product of political aspiration to office. Is it the morbid cravings after the honors and emoluments of office that is to cause the pillars of the happiext nation on the earth to fall, and the Godclass of liberty to take her flight through blood, devastation and woe mingled with the grouns and shricks of dying millions of once happy freemen. May the God of Heaven
