Written for the "Nebraska Advertiser." MY HOME IN THE COUNTRY.

BY TOM TURNIP.

You may talk of the pleasure of threading The streets of the populous town, Where the bustle and clatter of business Li heard in monotonous round; Where the spinning of wheels and the clashing Of eab-doors are constantly heard, And the figuring, the glither of fashion Rules all - and your talking's absurd.

You may talk of the charms of the Ocean, Where the finney herds fearlessly play; Where the waves with a quivering motion, Bear your ship to bright lands far away; Where the sea and sky grandly uniting, Form level berizons of blue, Where is everything fit to delight in, And you're talking expriciously too.

You may tell of the joys of sojourning In distant and tropic of lands: And laugh at the thoughts of returning To clasp beating hearts and warm hands; You blissfully speak of the rapture · Of scaling volcanoes "down South," And give us a wonderful chapter On the belching old Crater's wide mouth.

You may tell of all these and speak truly The feelings that burn in your breast, For each one has pleasures, which duly Considered must suit him the best; As for me, I am none of your gentry, That dote on the city and hall, For I love my own "Home in the Country," For better, far dearer than all.

O give me a home in the Country! Where the little birds warble and sing: Where primroses, blue Violets, and daisies, In careless luxuriance spring; Where the rippling brook winds through gre On its way to the catemet's fall: Where is blending of sunbeams and shadows, And I love them far dearer than all.

Tis delight fills the heart to o'erflowing, When rambling these fair seenes among, 'Tis in Nature's own beautoons showing. That we learn the first lessons of song. The eyes and the mind drink in pleasures, The heart bounds so lightly and free, That remance will steal into each measure;-O! a "Home in the Couptat" for an!"
