Advices from California, by the Star of the West, extend to the fifth ult. A conflagration occurred in the flourishing mining town of Columbia, on the 25th of Aug., which swept it almost to its existence.

In the mountains beyond Carson Valley, the immigrants have experienced much annoyance from the depredations of Indians, who have killed or driven off stock, and in some instances have committed murder.

On the morning of 22d August great excitement was occasioned in San Francisco, by the news that an attempt had been made to assassinate Manuel Castanera, by stabbing him while he slept, in the chamber of his hotel.

Mr. Barnett brings the intelligence of the massacre of a whole train consisting of six men and three children. One man was shot through and scalped, and left for dead, but was found still alive by those who came up first. She is not expected to live.

The people of Carson Valley and other valleys adjacent, held a public meeting at Genoa, on the 8th ult., to consider the propriety of petitioning Congress for a separate Territorial organization. So far as we can learn from the report of the proceedings published by persons who were present, the meeting was unanimous in favor of a new Territory of their own.

Hon. G. W. Venable, U. S. minister to Guatemala, died of Cholera a few days after his arrival in the capital of that country. Mr. Venable leaves a wife and six children in Tennessee. Several prominent citizens in the States of Central America are also among the victims of that disease which continues with unabated violence especially in Salvador and Guatemala.

From India we learn that the rebellion is far from being suppressed. Not only Nena Sahib the chief of the insurgents at Cawnpore, had not committed suicide, as previously reported, but eluding the pursuit of the British he had crossed the Ganges, and putting himself at the head of 15,000 rebels, had marched upon Lucknow, having an advance of four days on General Havelock who hastened to the relief of the Europeans besieged in the capital of Oude. The English had several very severe encounters with the natives, and lost two commanders, Gen. Banks who was killed by a shell, and Gen. Reid who died of cholera.

The news from Europe is of no extraordinary importance. The interview between Napoleon and Alexander took place at Stuggard. Nothing of an authentic character has yet transpired as to the result of the meeting. Information has reached Spain of the acceptance by Mexico of the mediation of France and England.

A dispatch from Paris reports the death of Mannin the patriotic dictator of Venice when it was besieged by the Austrians. A concession has been granted by the French government for the establishment of a sub-marine telegraphic line between Bordeaux and United States.

We have advices from Kansas to the 15th which give the Democrats a majority of five in the House, so far as heard from. It is thought the Council will be Republican by a very small majority—but on a joint ballot the Democrats will have a majority. Parrott has been elected to Congress over Ransom the Democratic nominee. The only parties known were the Democratic and Abolition, the Northern and Southern Democrats uniting with great harmony of action, and constituting the Administration or Walker party. This is quite a different state of affairs from what was expected by the free soil party and shows their immense imaginary majority slightly non est.

Mr. Editor: I beg leave to report through the columns of your paper the result of my experiments in the culture and manufacture of the Sorgho or Chinese Sugar Cane. My experiments were made not with the view of reporting extravagant results to speculate upon, but to obtain such a result as we might in future confidently expect from an ordinary crop of the Sorgho grown in this climate. I planted the seed at various times from the 10th of May to the 10th of June, and not being very sanguine of a satisfactory result I bestowed but little care or attention upon it, yet it grew finely, uninjured by any insects, grasshoppers, etc., and commenced ripening about 1st September. Being resolved to thoroughly test its Sugar and Syrup making qualities I went to work to make a mill to crush the cane; not having the necessary tools and machinery to assist in constructing a mill, I found it an exceedingly difficult task to construct one that would work. After several failures I finally succeeded in getting one to operate, which for the purpose of experimenting answered very well. It was made entirely of wood, two rollers 10 inches in diameter and 13 inches long with wooden cogs in each to make them turn together, one of the rollers projecting up through the frame for the attachment of a lever to drive by horse. This mill will crush out 12 gallons of juice per hour. A mill built upon a similar plan with three rollers of good seasoned timber and iron cog wheels, costing not over $35, would be amply sufficient to work up say five acres of cane per season, and with care will last for years.

Taking part of an acre as a test to experiment upon I found that it yielded at the rate of 1810 gallons of juice per acre which would make 230 gallons syrup; through another test of a different lot of cane 52 1-2 gallons juice yielded 11 gallons of syrup. This Syrup is pronounced by all who have tasted it, to be a very superior article, having a very pleasant and entirely different taste from the Orleans or Maple molasses. But our efforts to granulate it have so far been unsuccessful; it will not granulate by the same process that the Orleans and Maple Sugar will. I attribute this failure entirely to ignorance, Sugar has been made from it, and we have only to learn the secret of crystallizing to make sugar from it, and ere another crop is raised we will know it.

Apart from the manufacture of Sugar or Syrup the Sorgho is valuable as a forage crop, its adaptation to this soil and climate, its growing perfectly free from the ravages of the various insects, grasshoppers, etc., which have been so injurious to vegetation here, the value of its seed, and the enormous amount of fodder it yields, renders it one of the most valuable crops we can grow here.

I have made between two and three barrels of the Syrup from my crop of Sorgho raised this season; also a barrel of juice to make vinegar, and am retaining specimens of the Syrup made from the cane at different periods of cutting. One from cane cut when it first commenced ripening, another from cane fully ripe, the leaves yellow and falling off and the stalks commenced drying, another from cane after it had been killed by the frost, to test its keeping qualities and ascertain the precise time to cut the cane to obtain the largest yield and the best Syrup. The result together with some important facts learned by experience relative to the time for planting, method of culture, manufacture of Syrup, etc, I will be pleased to give my fellow farmers the benefit of in due.

Heritage, Oct. 17th, '57. Jno. S. MINICK.

Phenomena of the Pressure. In the balmy days of the United States Bank, commercial revulsions and monetary panics were always attributed to the "monster" in Chestnut st., and deputations of merchants and bank officers used to go on to Philadelphia from New York, Boston and other cities, to entreat Nick Biddle to afford the needed relief to the mercantile world. He was regarded as the Great Mogul of the financial world, and was supposed to possess the power, as he doubtless did to a certain extent, of making money plenty or scarce, as suited his convenience. Philadelphia was then the central point of the financial world on this continent; and the Bank, with its branches, was able to control the destiny of the country. Even after General Jackson had succeeded in depriving it of its charter, and it had no longer any connection with the Government, it still was supposed to exercise the same power in finances that it had done before, and Biddle was still regarded as a kind of Pontif in the commercial world. In the great panic of 1837, to which the present pressure has been most absurdly likened, a deputation of our merchants was sent on to Philadelphia to beseech Mr. Biddle to come here and afford some consolation to our suffering merchants by letting the light of his countenance shine upon the darkness of Wall street. He came accordingly, and no monarch was ever more graciously received by his submissive and admiring subjects than was the financial potentate by our business men, and there are, doubtless, many now who feel the force of the present pressure, who were then among the crowd that gathered around the Chestnut street Gamaliel and derived comfort and consolation from his promises of succor and support. But a little time after, and Biddle, Bank and all were involved in one common smash. With the fall of the United States Bank fell also the financial supremacy of Philadelphia, and New York became, by the natural order of affairs, the financial centre of the American continent. But it is a centre without a point, an Empire without an Emperor. There is no Nick Biddle now to whose power and wisdom the people can appeal. Instead of a manager they have a system, and it is only by understanding, sustaining and trusting in this that they can sustain themselves. The present flurry, for serious as the financial pressure has been, we cannot regard it as anything more, while it tests this system, will also make it more widely known to the country, and as it is adopted elsewhere will insure us against the recurrence of what has been deemed an inevitable commercial revulsion about once in twenty years. This city is now regarded as the financial regulator of the whole country. Before Boston could determine whether to suspend specie payments or not she waited first to know what New York would do; and Philadelphia is now convinced that if she had acted with the same prudent caution she might have saved herself from the commercial disgrace which she has brought upon herself.

There are several marked phenomena attending the present crisis in money affairs, which have never been witnessed in any previous commercial revulsion, and one of the most remarkable of them is that the revulsion has come when the entire country is in a condition of unwarlike prosperity, when the great staples of the country are more abundant than they were ever before, and when the whole nation has been literally flooded with gold. The great panic of 1837, which extended over nearly five years, could easily have been foreseen, or at least accounted for by the merest tyro in political economy; by the breaking up of a long-established banking system, and speculation in fictitious land projects, the "great fire," and a succession of short crops, produced the great mercantile disaster of that period. Since then we have enjoyed a succession of prosperous years, and the only disturbing causes have been the discovery of the California gold mines, and the growth of our railroad system. But these are elements of prosperity, and not of ruin. Our railroads have cost us something more than $700,000,000, which has been expended during the past fifteen years, and a considerable portion of which has been contributed from abroad, and not been repaid. It is about the amount that England spent in two years in her Crimean war for which she received not a shilling in return, while our railroads have more than paid for themselves by developing the resources of the country. Monetary panics have heretofore been universal in their influence, but we now find certain classes of merchants who do not appear to have been touched by the panic. In the list of the reported failures, we do not find the names of any grocery; yet they form a most important class of our business men and their transactions are very heavy amounts. One of the assigned causes of the superior stability of the grocers is that they give shorter credits than other jobbers, but the real cause probably is that the commerce in articles which come under the head of groceries is limited to the actual wants of customers, while in dry goods and other articles of luxury there is no limit to consumption.

The present panic is mainly the result of a timidity of feeling which would long since have worn itself away, and given place to a more confident tone in the stability of our commercial institutions, but for the two accidents of the failure of the Ohio Life and Trust Company and the loss of the Central America. But the ill effects of these untoward events are beginning to disappear, and it cannot be long before a healthy tone will be restored to the public mind, and the wheels of commerce will begin to revolve again with their accustomed regularity of movement.—New York Times.

The Baltimore American contains the following: SMALL GOLD COIN.—Secretary Cobb, in addition to other wise measures by which he has sought to time the Government disbursements so as to aid as far as possible in alleviating the financial pressure, has issued orders for the transfer of a large amount of bullion from the assay office at New York, to the Philadelphia mint, for the purpose of promptly meeting the present demand for the small gold coinage. The plentiful distribution of the smaller gold coins, will greatly tend to prevent inconvenience from the want of small currency. Specie in this shape will not be so apt to go into the hands of the brokers as coin of the larger denominations.
