Temperance No. 2.

There are different classes of truths belonging to the subject of temperance which are respectively applicable to all the different conditions of life. On the present occasion I solicited the attention of the rich and educated. I trust I will succeed in demonstrating that either their own use of the old king, or as it much more frequently happens, the use by those for whose indulgences they are to suffer, is the grand procuring cause of their misfortunes and their social inequality.

But I will not, I cannot delineate these intolerable realities. They cannot be spoken by mortal tongue. They cannot be conceived by mortal mind.

Now, if the more favored classes of our society will do nothing to arrest the progress of intemperance, which more than all things else creates bad men and makes bad men worse, they may well tremble for their country, for their property and for their families.

Suppose Robert Fulton had been a sot, suppose the long, laborious and secluded period spent by Eli Whitney in inventing and perfecting the cotton gin had been spent in a tip room, yet who can doubt that intemperance has robbed our country of many Fultons and many Whitneys.

Who in the circle of his own acquaintances does not remember some shining intellect, some bright orb of mind rising in splendor and rapidly ascending to a refulgent day, then suddenly shrouded in everlasting night? And by what means do all this misery and woe come upon mankind?

The answer is plain; some wealthy merchants import liquor from abroad that they may increase their wealth; some capitalists, from the nutritious grains and the cooling fruits of the earth, distill it at home that they may add to their capital; the legislatures invest certain subordinate officials with discretionary power to grant so many licenses as the public good, as the public good, for such is the blasphemous phraseology of the law, may require.

Massachusetts and Rhode Island have spread the protecting arches of their roof over their soil. Minnesota has already done the same—like a young man resolved to be strong and great, and therefore taking the early row that promise wisdom and length of days. I trust that the Excelsior Territory, Nebraska, will follow their example; and become a State in morals as well as in power.

It is refreshing in these hard times to find the poor printer occasionally remembered, and our especial thanks are due to friend CLARK for a box of excellent and fine flavored cigars.

Mr. CLARK has recently purchased the establishment formerly owned by J. R. Davis, and having made large additions thereto is now prepared to fill orders for any amount and style of Groceries, either at wholesale or retail. Those patronizing him will find a liberal dealer, and an honest straightforward business man.

Of the Baltimore Clothing Store, has just received a large supply of new clothing which will be sold low for cash.—DAME is a general favorite, and serves his friends with a genial good humor refreshing to see. Call and examine.

Published at Washington, D. C., is a strictly national paper, upholds States rights, and is the organ of the National Democratic party and of the Administration. No Democrat should be without it and no one can be fully posted on matters connected with the administration, unless he peruses the columns of this paper.
