From "Frank Forrester's" Field Sports. Canine Madness. From my childhood upward I have been among dogs. My father kept a large kennel of Pointers and Setters; from the age of ten years I was among Fox-hounds. I lived, up to my visiting the United States, in Yorkshire, perhaps the most sporting county in England; and since I have been a man, I never have been without one dog, and much oftener have owned half a dozen.

During this space of time, certainly not less than thirty-five years of clear and comprehensive memory, I have never seen a mad dog, nor heard an authenticated instance of a dog being mad, though I have seen hundreds knocked on the head as mad, which were infinitely sner than their slayers.

The consequence of this fact—for a fact it is—was, that for many years I was a disbeliever, if not in the possibility of canine madness at all, at least in the possibility of its communication to any animals but those of the canine race. And all the deaths attributed to hydrophobia—as the disease is most absurdly misnamed—I assigned to tetanus—lock jaw—to inflammatory disease arising from punctured wounds, and a systematic state of body—to imagination and to terror.

Of these maladies, I am still well satisfied that four fifths of the persons said to die of hydrophobia, are the victims, as well as of malpractice in cutting and burning the parts.

Since studying Bayline's Canine Pathology, I am satisfied that I carried my theory too far, and that the disease is communicable to the human race, although the disease, even in the dog, is unusual. The ignorance concerning this malady, the superstitious awe in which it is held, the absurdly sanguinary laws, and the popular mania—for I can call it nothing else—existing in this country with regard to that highly useful and excellent animal, the dog, which has been properly styled the natural friend of man, have induced me to spend considerable space to the symptoms, treatment, and diagnosis of canine madness, both in the animal and in the human being.

Canine madness, if taken in hand instantly, is a disease infinitely more under the control of the mediciner, than half the maladies to which we are liable—more so than malignant fever, for instance, and more so than any serious inflammation; if neglected until late, it is fatal—so are they. But had I my choice to-morrow, of being an attack of violent bronchitis, inflammation of the lungs or bowels, or scarlet or typhus fever, I would certainly choose the dog. The remedy is severe and painful, but it is at least infallible.

Hear now what Blane, a canine veterinarian of the first order, says on the subject. On the dog Mr. Blane is what Mr. Abernathy, or Sir Astley Cooper, are on the man, and his opinions are entitled to the like respect.

Mr. Youatt coincides in the opinion that rabies is produced by inoculation alone. This statement alone, on such authority, ought to go far towards allaying the public terrors on this subject, and to mitigate the absurd ferocity of the laws annually passed by those everywhere, on earth most stupid, ignorant, obstinate, prejudiced and tyrannical of all bodies—I mean aldermanic corporations!

It may be held as a positive and established fact, that unless bitten by other dogs, dogs never go mad.

"The remote causes of spontaneous rabies, us advocated by the favorers of that doctrine, are various. Heat has long been considered as a grand agent, but the direct proof to the contrary are fast wearing away this prejudice. It is known that many countries under the torrid zone are entirely free from canine madness; and in such hot countries as it is found, it does not appear that by the heat of the climate it gains any accession to its frequency or morbid character. We have Burrow's authority for stating that is almost, if not entirely, unknown over the vast continent of South America. In many of the Western isles it is a stranger, and in Egypt, Volney says he never heard of it. Larrey, Brown and others, inform us that it has never visited the burning clime of Syria.

"The quality and quantity of the food has been assigned as a cause of rabies; but in dogs which have been accidentally subjected to a deprivation of food, bordering upon starvation, it never yet took place. Neither has reptiles ever occasioned it, although it has proved the parent of many other inflammatory affections. Putrid food has been fully proved to have no title to generating it; would it, a priori, be likely to produce it in predatory animals, whose stomachs must, by nature, be forced to subsist on matter in various stages of decomposition."

Mr. Blane continues to discuss this point at some length, learnedly and curiously no doubt, as the cogent question, also, whether the disease arose spontaneously at first in the dog, wolf, fox or jackal; but these questions, however curious or interesting, become merely matters of investigation and hypothetical enquiry for critics, being set at rest for all purposes of practical utility by the positive dictum that the case is now—even in the dog—never spontaneously generated. The remarks concerning food, drink, climate, &c., I admitted here, not on their own account so much, as in corroboration of that dictum. All quadrupeds may be attacked by it, and may convey the contagion to others, although the probability of doing so is of course diminished by the natural predisposition of the animal to bite, or the reverse.

Again, it appears to be certain, that the virus or communicating medium radiates in the saliva only—that the flesh, the blood and the milk are innocent, whether injected or taken inwardly—and lastly, that the virus can be communicated through a wound or abrasion of the outer skin and not otherwise—although it is barely possible it may be received through the mucous membrane of the lips, eyelids or nostrils.

Here in the North, where poisonous reptiles are comparatively scarce, rattlesnake bites have unusually terminated fatally. The most skillful physicians have been completely baffled, after resorting to all the remedies of the materia medica, and their patients given up to die. But there is no reason why the fang of a rattlesnake should be more fatal than the bite of a New Jersey mosquito. In case you are bitten, then, resort to the remedy we have named.

We do not approve of drunkenness under other circumstances, but should you ever be so unfortunate as to be bitten by a snake, by all means get 'gloriously drunk,' and the sooner you do so the sooner you will be 'all right.'—N. Y. Express.

How One Feels in Battle. In an account of the battle of Montebello, written by a young non-commissioned French officer to a newspaper at home, he says:

"Our officers kept us back, for we were not numerous enough to charge upon the enemy. This was, moreover, most prudent, for this murderous fire—so fatal to the white coats—did us but little harm.—Our conical balls penetrated their dense masses, while those of the Austrians whistled past our ears and respected our persons. It was the first time I had faced fire, nor was I the only one. Well, I am satisfied with myself. True, I dodged the first balls, but Henry IV. they say, did the same at the beginning of every battle. It is, in fact, a physical effect, independent of the will.

But, this tribute paid, if you could only feel how each shot electrifies you. It is like a whip on a racer's legs. The balls whistle past you, turn up the earth around you, kill one, wound another, and you hardly notice them. You grow intoxicated, the smell of the powder mounts to your brain. The eye becomes bloodshot and its look is fixed on the enemy. There is something of all the passions in that terrible passion excited in a soldier by the sight of blood and the tumult of battle.

Everybody who has tried it, testifies to the peculiar intoxication that is produced by being in battle. There is an infatigable influence about the smell of powder, the shrill whistle of a bullet, and the sight of human blood, that instantly transforms men from cowards to heroes—from women sometimes to monsters. None can tell of the nature or mystery of that influence, but those who have been in the fray themselves.

Anonymous Marriages. The following have been going the round of the papers, and were first published in the Utica Evening Telegraph:

Wm. Bean to Sarah Greenfield: If fate shall to their wishes yield, And fate to true love leans, Time may bestow on this Greenfield A lovely crop of Beans.

Capt. Graves to Nancy Graves: The graves, 'tis said, Will yield their dead, When the last trumpet shallow the skies; But if God please, From Graves like these A dozen living folks may rise.

Asaph Spades to Angelina Bowers: 'Tis clearly proved, we think, that maids Can't play the game, with all their powers, For here we see the case of spades. When Spades are 'trumps' can take the Bowers.

A Mississippi County clerk having issued a marriage license for a young man shortly after received the following note from him:

State of Miss., July the 5th, 1859. Mr. Moody ples let this matter stand over until further orders the girl has Flu the track By her own Request and Release my name from off of this Bond if you ples,

Among those who went to the Falls the other day to see Blondin roll to wheelbarrow over the rope, was a Rochester physician, who was determined to see all the others saw, and he declared that the Frenchman not only pushed the barrow across the river on the rope, but that he actually, on returning, took up the rope as he went along, and wheeled in upon the bank. Some of the bystanders had doubts as to the correctness of the narration, when the narrator, expressing an indifferent opinion of their intellects; assured them that taking up the rope in the wheelbarrow was no great feat, but cutting off the guys with his jack knife as he came to them bothered him some!

A boulder weighing about two pounds was found under the shirt bosom of a colored individual arrested in a row. On being questioned as to how it came in his possession, he exclaimed with a look of blank astonishment: "Dat's just what I'd like to know how that infernal dernick got inter my buzum. I s'pect some dem nig-gers must have frow'd it dar."

"I say, Bill, then you'r getting two dollars a week now?"

"Well, you might a knowed that, by seein' all the fellers come scraipin' round me that would not notice me when I was poor."

Some one blames Dr. Marsh for changing his mind. "Well," said he, "that is the difference between a man and a jackass; the jackass can't change his mind, and the man can—it's a human privilege."

"Death Loves a Shining Mark." We are tired of seeing this hackneyed and absurd quotation so frequently paraded before our eyes in obituary notices.—How do you know that death loves a shining any more than a dull mark? We suppose dolls and punkin heads die occasionally, and indeed pretty frequently, and it is hardly treating death fairly, who is not so unkind after all if we are ready to meet him, to accuse him of showing partiality. Therefore, dear reader, if you are unusually imbecile (which, by the way, you can't possibly be if you are in the habit of reading and paying for our valuable paper—see terms elsewhere) don't flatter yourself that Death will pass your door on this account to knock at that of your "shining" neighbor.

"You Forgot Me." A good joke is told at the expense of one of our church going citizens who is the father of an interesting family of children, and among them a bright eyed boy, numbering four or five summers, the pet of the household and unanimously voted the drollest mischief alive.

On Saturday night he had been bribed keep peace, and retire to bed an hour earlier than usual, with the promise that on the morrow he might go with the family to church. On Sunday morning it was found inconvenient to put the youngster through the regular course of washing and necessary for his proper appearance at the sanctuary, and the family slipped off without him. They had not, however, more than got comfortably seated in their pew, when in walked the youngster with nothing on but his night wrapper and cloth cap. "You forgot me," said he, in a tone loud enough to be heard all over the church. The feelings of the parents can be more easily imagined than described.—Lafayette Journal.
