From private information believed to be reliable it is believed that Virginia herself does not mediate an attack on Washington, that subject being left for consideration of the Confederate States. Their throwing troops into Virginia, is said to be in anticipation of a declaration of war by the Congress, as it is expected that a large gathering in Washington is ultimately intended to invade the South.

By permission of the Secretary of the Treasury the steamer Bradford of the Boston and Baltimore line will sail tomorrow with a full cargo for Baltimore. She is forbidden to call at Norfolk.

In the Maryland Legislature yesterday the Committee on Federal Relations made a report. They considered the interdiction of travel an aggravated evil, but if facilities for invasion were offered to fanatical and excited multitudes from the North who publicly threatened our destruction, it could hardly be consistent with prudence to re-open the channels of intercourse with the Northern States, they cannot be efficiently re-established without guarantee from some quarter of the safety and peace of Maryland.
