Circulation of the Sap.
The last number of the Gardener's Monthly contains a very interesting article from Yardley Taylor on the "Circulation of the Sap," from which we make the following extract:
"The theory of a downward flow of sap, as supposed by the first writers on vegetable physiology, is giving way, and the writers of the present day assert that there is no such flow. (See article 'Botany' in the 'New American Encyclopedia.') Theoretical writers, or those who copy from former ones, often advanced the same theory; while practical men, who base their theories upon their observations of nature, reject it. Nurserymen who practice grafting, know that success can be had by inserting the graft so that the inner bark of the graft of the stock shall be in contact, so as to admit of the sap from between the bark and the wood passing upward into the graft between its bark and wood. There can be no other way for growth, as the granules of new wood only form between the bark and sap-wood, no where else, and this material for growth must come from below, for there are no leaves above to prepare the matter for assimilation, as the downward theory supposes. Building, as practiced by nurserymen, is equally conclusive; there the bud only rests upon the sap-wood beneath the bark, and in no contact with the pores of the wood at all, only with the pores between the bark and wood; and if the top of the stalk is cut off, as is usual, it grows at once, though there is no part above from which a downward flow can come. Many more facts might be mentioned, all leading to the same conclusion, but these, so well known to all who are acquainted with grafting or budding, may suffice; indeed, the evidence appears to me to be so conclusive, that I can see no reason whatever for a downward flow. It appears to me to be too much of a roundabout way to attain an object, to be consistent with what we know of the simplicity of nature's laws; they are always direct and to be admired for their simplicity.
