REVOLUTIONARY HEROISM. BY EMERSON BENNETT. Men have been immortalized for dying on the battle-field in some desperate action where their personal valor became conspicuous and changed an apparent defeat into an important victory.

And what of the courage and sacrifice of the loving wife and mother, who, with the same high sense of duty, bids him her idol, who is all the world to her, go forth to peril his precious life, and leave her to weep and mourn for him as one she may never look upon again?

When an invading army is encamped in the country of an enemy, the inhabitants for miles around are never secure in either property or life.

In a rather lonely part of the country, a few miles northward from Philadelphia, at the time the British took possession of the city, there stood a solitary dwelling, occupied by a Mrs. Parker, a maiden sister older than herself, and two children of tender years.

There, Nancy, pursued the maiden sister, as if she were giving directions about some of the ordinary affairs of life, "we're as ready now as we can be, I s'pose—so just run and shove back the bolts of the shop door, but don't make any noise about it, and then hurry into the bedroom, to your children, and pray for all of us."

ready them scoundrels is trying to break down the door. This was literally true. The party outside becoming madly impatient at the delay of those inside to throw open the door to them, were now in the act of battering it down, and loudly cursing and swearing at the occupants of the dwelling.

"Go, Nancy—go—and may God bless you!" "And you, Sally?" sobbed the other, as she again kissed her and hurried away to the room in which her innocent children were still sleeping, undisturbed by the noise, and unconscious of their danger.

"The explosion was heard for miles around; and the next day the news flew so rapidly, that before night at least fifty people were gathered at the farm, besides a small body of American troops; all of whom assisted in collecting and burying the dead villains, clearing away the rubbish, and putting things into as comfortable a shape as possible for the sisters, who had resolved to remain where they were.

Such noble heroism had many parallels during the war of the Revolution. Married by Chance. The Count de M. lived in a state of single and independent blessedness.

The Count, who so frequently made the first step towards matrimony, but as frequently drawn back, had not yet decided upon the course he should adopt in this case—he had promised the friends of the lady repeatedly, but had made no outward sign of performance.

"Take one of these letters," said he, "and carry it to the Chateau de —." "Which way please?" "The servant chose a letter. The Count burnt the other without opening it."

SLIGHT OF HAND.—Refusing an offer of marriage.

Dollars in Dixie. When we hear of a pair of boots being sold for $100 in the South, it is not so much an evidence that boots are enormously high there, as the rebel shiplasters are almost valueless.

The light value placed by the rebels themselves upon their government currency, and their anxiety to barter it on almost any terms for our paper, indicate as clearly as the defeat of their armies and the capture of their stronghold, that the end of the great revolt approaches.

NEW YORK RUFFIANISM.—Among the "institutions" that have made most headway in the city of New York during the last five-and-twenty years, may be classed we think the Noble Order of Ready-handed Ruffians.

Job's PATIENCE.—AS VIEWED BY A LADY.—"If there is a proverb that needs revamping, it is 'the patience of Job!'"

BRITISH SUPERSTITION.—The other day a laboring man from Worplesdon called upon a chemist in Guildford, and gravely informed him that his wife had been bewitched two years ago, and that she had remained in that state ever since, much to the grief of her husband and family.

LONG RANGE.—It is said of the Ferris gun that it throws shells nine miles, or nearly twice the distance the big gun attained with which Gilmore shelled Charleston.

AN EXCELLENT BARGAIN.—It is reported that the Princess Alexandra, when asked by the Prince of Wales for her hand in marriage, proposed to grant it for twenty-five shillings, which, said she, archly, is equal, you know, to one sovereign and one crown in England.

General Burnside's Operations. The dispatch of General Burnside, announcing the capture of a rebel brigade and fourteen pieces of artillery, at Cumberland Gap, will be read through the country with gratification and surprise.

One of the most curious instances of eccentricity occurred in England so lately as 1838 in which a will, where the testator had left his money, away from his relatives, to his housekeeper, was disputed on the ground of intrinsic evidence of insanity in the document itself.

A man near Cleveland, Ohio, applied for exemption from the draft because an old mother needed his cherishing care.—To show how much feeling this affectionate son has for his old mother, the neighbors say he has had her coffin in the house for over two years.

REORGANIZATION OF FLORIDA.—Mr. L. J. Stuckey, Tax Commissioner of Florida, arrived in Washington a few days since. He came for the purpose of representing to the President the desire of the people of Florida that a force should be sent to that State to relieve them from rebel rule.

A little chivalry was manifest among the rebels at Charleston, in their treatment of those who died in their hospitals. Quite a number of small articles and money, belonging to deceased members of the New Hampshire Reg., were sent to the regiment under a flag of truce.

We do not die wholly at our death; we have moldered away long before. Faculty after faculty, interest after interest, attachment after attachment disappear; we are torn from ourselves while living; year after year sees us no longer the same, and death only consigns the last fragments of what we were to the grave.

It was John Armstrong of Jersey City who ate a plate of ice cream at a fair for the benefit of sick and wounded soldiers, laid down a five hundred dollar treasury note and coolly declined the change. The circumstance was indorsed on the back of the note by a lady attendant, and came to light in Washington.
