

R. W. Murray

Nebraska Advertiser

Woolworth's Book Store
And Printer
VOL. XI

NEBRASKA ADVERTISER
GEO. W. HILL & CO.
Advertiser Block, Main St. between 1st & 2d
Brownville, Neb.

LOCK & WATCHES
JEWELRY!
JOSEPH SHUTZ
The Jeweler and Watchmaker
The largest and best selected stock of goods in the city.
The door west of Grant's Store, Brownville, Nebraska.
Repairing
of Clocks, Watches and Jewelry done on the premises.
WORK WARRANTED.
Newport Neb. March 15th, 1866. No. 26
EDWARD W. THOMAS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
Office corner of Main and First Streets,
BROWNVILLE, NEBRASKA.
CHARLES G. DORSEY
ATTORNEY AT LAW
Next Door to Carson's Bank,
MAIN STREET
Brownville Nebraska
Evan Worthing,
Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Choice
Liquors, Wines, Ale, Beer, ALSO AGENT FOR
PITTS BUFFALO THRASHING
MACHINE, NEW YORK CLEVER
RANGING REAPER, QUAKER
MOWER and BICK EYE CULTIVATOR.
WHITNEY'S BLOCK,
Main Street, Brownville
Mar. 27th 1866. No. 24 1/2 ft. on

C. F. STEWART, M. D.
OFFICE
South East corner of Main and First Streets
BROWNVILLE, NEBRASKA.
Office hours—7 to 9 A. M. and 1 to 2 and 6 1/2 to 7 1/2 P. M.
Brownville, Nebraska, May 21st, 1866—No. 34, 1/2
A. S. HOLLADAY, M. D.
Graduated in 1851.
Located in Brownville in 1855.
PHYSICIAN SURGEON
AND
OBSTETRICIAN
Dr. Holladay has on hand complete sets of Apparatus for Trephining and Obstetrical Instruments.
Office: Holladay & Co's Drug Store
Two Doors East of Post Office.
P. S.—Special attention given to Obstetrics and the diseases of women and children. x-44-ly

DORSEY, HOADLEY & CO.,
REAL ESTATE AGENTS,
and Dealers in Land Warrants, and Agricultural College Scrip.
Office, in Land Office Building,
Brownville, Neb.
Buy and sell improved and unimproved lands.
May sell and issue Land Warrants, and agricultural College Scrip.
Make careful selections of government Lands for location, Homesteads, and pre-emption cases, in the Land Office.
Letters of inquiry, promptly and cheerfully answered.
Correspondence Solicited. No. 25 1/2

Programme of the Odd Fellow's
Festival at Brownville, Nebraska,
April 26th, 1867.
1st. Music and Singing the Odes.
2nd. Reading of the Proclamation of the G. S. of the United States.
3rd. Prayer by Rev. B. C. Golliday.
4th. Address by Past Grand Master A. D. Jones.
5th. Music.
6th. Address by Past Grand A. S. Holladay, as follows:
Most Worthy Grand Master and Brethren:—Our Most Worthy Past Grand Master, A. D. Jones, having entertained you with an able and interesting address on the rise, progress, and future of the Order, I shall endeavor to call your attention, briefly, to the consideration of other matters. I am not, however, insensible of the necessity of that charity which is one of the chief attributes of all Oddfellows.

Order, because their affection for him has inspired him with a like sentiment, but his heart and hand moves at every case of suffering. He has learned the blessedness of benevolence. His lessons he does not forget, nor neglect to act upon. We have seen, that this is not a political institution, for the political views of a man, neither recommend nor injure his connection with the Order. But its true status is a social institution, having as its aim, pecuniary benefits which are partly a loan to give, its consistency, and partly a means to aid in accomplishing the social designs of brotherhood.

Order, because their affection for him has inspired him with a like sentiment, but his heart and hand moves at every case of suffering. He has learned the blessedness of benevolence. His lessons he does not forget, nor neglect to act upon. We have seen, that this is not a political institution, for the political views of a man, neither recommend nor injure his connection with the Order. But its true status is a social institution, having as its aim, pecuniary benefits which are partly a loan to give, its consistency, and partly a means to aid in accomplishing the social designs of brotherhood.

GEO. A. PRINCE & CO'S
39 Varieties, with Patent and Tenants or Squares.
School Organs and Melodeons.
Fintabdia
Elegant Rosewood, Walnut or Oak Cases.
No Charge for Boxing or Shipping.
$35,000 Now in Use.
AN ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, containing a full description of every instrument of the most eminent workmen, as to the superior excellence of every instrument—can be seen at this Office.
GEO. W. HILL & CO
Brownville Nebraska.

CHARLES HELLMER,
Boot and Shoe
MAKER
Main St., 2 doors below Brownville House.
ROWVILLE, N. B.
Has on hand a superior stock of Boots and Shoes and the best material and ability for doing
CUSTOM WORK
Repairing done with neatness and dispatch
Terms Cash. 1/2-1/2
FRANZ HELLMER,
Wagon Maker,
OPPOSITE DEUSER'S TIN SHOP,
BROWNVILLE, NEBRASKA.
WAGONS, SUGGLES, FLOWS, CULTIVATORS, &c. Repaired on short notice, at low rates, and warranted to satisfaction. x-13-in-66

LOUIS WALDTER,
House-Sign & Ornamental
PAINTER
Glazier, Gilder, Grainer,
PAPER HANGER etc.
All work done in a workmanlike manner, and on strictly
CASH
TERMS.
ONE DOOR WEST OF BROWNVILLE HOUSE
NEW FIRM
AND
NEW GOODS
R. T. RAINEY & W. D. LEWIS
[SUCCESSORS TO RAINEY & CO.]
Respectfully inform the Citizens of the City and County that they are in receipt of a large and complete assortment of Ladies Dress Goods,
WHITE GOODS,
HOSERY,
With an endless variety of
NOTIONS.
Together with the Largest Stock of Custom Made
BOOTS AND SHOES
Ever brought to this City—all of which was purchased prior to the late advance in gold, which enables us to offer superior inducements to those desirous of purchasing. We also, keep on hand a fresh stock of Groceries
And a good assortment of
QUENESWARE
Remember the Place, Main Street, One Door above the Postoffice, Brownville, Nebraska.
9-10-66

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

Order, because their affection for him has inspired him with a like sentiment, but his heart and hand moves at every case of suffering. He has learned the blessedness of benevolence. His lessons he does not forget, nor neglect to act upon. We have seen, that this is not a political institution, for the political views of a man, neither recommend nor injure his connection with the Order. But its true status is a social institution, having as its aim, pecuniary benefits which are partly a loan to give, its consistency, and partly a means to aid in accomplishing the social designs of brotherhood.

Order, because their affection for him has inspired him with a like sentiment, but his heart and hand moves at every case of suffering. He has learned the blessedness of benevolence. His lessons he does not forget, nor neglect to act upon. We have seen, that this is not a political institution, for the political views of a man, neither recommend nor injure his connection with the Order. But its true status is a social institution, having as its aim, pecuniary benefits which are partly a loan to give, its consistency, and partly a means to aid in accomplishing the social designs of brotherhood.

Mrs. M. W. Bennett,
Millinery & Fancy Goods
STORE
Main Street one door west of the Post Office
BROWNVILLE, NEBRASKA.
A superior stock of Fall and Winter Goods received. Everything in the Millinery line kept constantly on hand. Dress-Making, Bonnet Making, and all the latest fashions to order.
October, 25 1865. x-11-25-ly

A. ROBINSON,
BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
Main between 1st & 2d Street
Brownville, Nebraska
Takes this method of informing the public that he has on hand a splendid assortment of Gent's and Ladies' Shoes and Children's
BOOTS AND SHOES.
Custom work done with neatness and dispatch. Leading edge on short notice. x-13-in-66
TO THE FARMERS OF NEBAMA CO.,
AND VICINITY
I would respectfully say that I have and am now receiving a large stock of CLOTHING
FOR Winter and Spring Wear.
I keep constantly on hand a full assortment of
GENT'S CLOTHING
of all kinds.
Bever Cloth Coats, Pants & Vests,
French Cloth Clothing in Latest Styles,
Cashmere Goods all descriptions.
ALSO,
Furnishing Goods,
TO SUIT THE TRADE.
All of which I propose to sell as Cheap or Cheaper
Than any of my Competitors. All I ask for the citizens of Nemaha and adjoining counties
TO GIVE ME A CALL
And find out for themselves
REMEMBER THE
BRANCH CLOTHING STORE
MAIN STREET,
BROWNVILLE, NEB.
BEN ROGERS & CO.
BEN ROGERS,
R. W. PUNAS,
BROWNVILLE, NEB.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

SEWING MACHINE
NOTICE TO FARMERS.
The undersigned having rented the Brownville
FLOURING MILLS,
Takes this method of informing the public that he is now doing
CUSTOM WORK
for the accommodation of farmers and others in the vicinity.
The mill is now in operation and all orders for grain are respectfully invited.
The highest cash price given for wheat.
W. MORRIS.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.

and die, or in the transactions of life, we exhibit a disposition to oppress, or take advantage of one another's necessities, we are surely and swiftly drifting toward the rocks and whirlpools of violated honor, and fidelity, and may be deservedly branded, as unworthy the confidence of all good men. The obligation of justice is no less binding on our members, than all others of the human family. To do unto others, as we would have others to do unto us, is a role to which we cannot too closely adhere. Justice teaches us never to wrong one another; as brothers, it also teaches us never to wrong anyone, be he a brother or a stranger; if we would carry this rule into daily practice; live up to it in all our dealings one with the other, and feel that we do so as an obligation we owe to the Order, how great would be the respect, which we would receive as individuals. The effects of such a course, would depure this life of every taint of sin and selfishness, but few hearts would be pierced with grief, but few eyes moistened with the tear of anguish. The obligations that rest upon ourselves, cannot be renounced, or set aside at pleasure. With all good Oddfellows they are binding and sacred; in war, as in peace, in sickness, as in health; they know no South, no North, no East, no West—but one country and one common humanity—one God and one brotherhood of man. During the late civil war no attempt was made to establish a Northern, or Southern Oddfellowship. The thundering sword of the cannon, the glittering of the sword, the shout of victory, the wail of defeat, the clang of arms, the shriek of agony, the groan of death, did not destroy the solemn obligations of our ancient Order, but so soon as peace was declared the smothered flames of Love, friendship and truth illuminated the hall of the Grand Lodge of the United States; all were mingling together again as a band of brothers.