'Mid autums's scenes so drear, Where all is blighting and decay, And beauteous tints have passed away From everything?

Bright flowers why linger now, When every pendant bough Has lost its levely robe of green, And nothing gay is to be seen

Rare flowers how can ye smile, And fragrant be, the while In this sad time of gloom and death, When in the cold winds frosty breath

Ye are like some few friends. With whom my spirit blends, Who linger on the shore of time; While many, stricken in their prime, Sleep in the shades.

They, like my friends, have gone, And ye, like me, are lone;-But there's a land where flowers bloom, Forever free from deaths dark doom-Where naught decays.

Beset by Bushrangers,

Surveying and exploring a new district in Queensland is a matter of some hardship and peril. In the evenings, after the day's work is over, when we have finished our "damper," salt beef, and tea, and are smoking our pipes round a blazing log fire, many a strange story is told. My men are old Bushmen, and are up to athing or two-especially my Chinaman

He is a harum-scarum, reckless, handsome, genuine Irishman of very respectable family, induced to emigrate many years ago as a hopeless scapegrace. He has knocked about Queensland and New South wales, in all sort of capacities. I fell in with him by chance. I was fortunate enough to save his life, engaged him, and believed him to be as devoted

A few years ago my Chinaman was journeying in the direction of Sydney from a place in the interior, called, I think, Jinballah. Having stopped at several public houses on the way, he found himself still on his journey with a ten-pound note half a sovereign, and a half-crown in his pocket, About a hundred miles in a public-house which he had entered to obtain refreshment. The landlady was in a great fright:

"You are not one of thim are you?" "What do you mean?" "Och, its the bushrangers I mean.

You aren't one of thim?" "No. Have they been here then?" "Yes, half an hour ago, and cleared my house of all I had. Musha! the widdy's curse be upon thim !"
