LOCATION OF PERU.

Peru is situated on the west bank of the Missouri river, in Nemaha County, about five miles south of the Otoe County line, and nine miles northwest of Brownville. Has a remarkably pleasant location, and bid fair to become a town of no little importance. It has a population of about 800. The State Normal School is located here, and some branches of business are well represented, but the trade carried on here is not up to the demands of the country. It contains many fine residences, and some good business houses. There are here two fine churches—Episcopal and Methodist; good District School House, one Steam Flouring Mill, two Hotels, one Livery Stable, five general Stores, two Drug Stores, one Hardware Store and Tin Shop, two Lumber Yards, three Blacksmith Shops, one Wagon and Carriage Shop, two Shoe Shops, one Bakery, one Harness Shop, two Paint Shops, two Meat Markets, two Agricultural Implement Houses, one Barber Shop, one Real Estate and Insurance Agency, two Brick Yards, lots of Clergymen, Physicians, Politicians, &c., but no Lawyer's Office nor Saloon in town.

[Extract from Wm. M. Carlton's poem.]

THE MODEL SUBSCRIBER.

"Good morning, sir; Mr. Editor, how are the folks to-day?
I owe you for next year's Specktator, I thought I'd come and pay
And Jones is agoin' to take it, and this is his money here;
I shut down lendin' it to him, and then cooked him to try it a year.
And here is a few little items that happened last week in our town;
I thought they'd look good for the paper and so I just jotted 'em down.
And here is a basket of cherries my wife picked expressly for you;
And a small bunch of flowers from Jennie—she thought she must send something, too.
You're doing the politics bully, as all of our family ages;
Just keep you're old goose-quill a flappin' and give 'em a good one for me.
And now you are clinch full of business, and I won't be taking your time.
I've things of my own I must 'tend to—good day, sir, I believe I will climb."
The Editor sat in his sanctum and brought down his fist with a thump,
"God bless that old farmer," he muttered, "he's a regular jolly old trump."
And 'tis thus with our noble profession, and thus it will ever be still;
There are some who appreciate its labor, and some who perhaps never will.
But in the great time that is coming, when Gabriel's trumpet shall sound,
And they who have labored and rested shall come from the quivering ground,
When they who have striven and suffered, to teach and ennoble the race,
Shall march at the front of the column, each one in his God-given place,
As they march through the gates of The City, with proud and victorious tread,
The editor and his assistants will not travel far from the head.

FROM IRELAND.

DUBLIN, IRELAND, Nov. 30, 1871.

Editor Nebraska Advertiser:

Before leaving Mallow we thought of going via. Blackrock and the castle on the promontory from which William Penn embarked for America, after his conversion to Quakerism at Cork when he listened to the preaching of Thomas Loe, then to Youghal, the city which surrendered to the forces of King William in 1690; and the home of Sir Walter Raleigh, who introduced the potatoe, and in whose garden it was first planted and when it is said that the apples which grew on the stalk were at first collected, but when cooked were found so disagreeable to the taste that the plant was considered useless until, on the ground being dug up to receive some other crop, the roots were discovered increased fifty fold, and from these few tubers were propagated, it is said, the count ess wealth of potatoes with which the soil of Ireland teems.

But we proceed to Dublin, passing Carleville, Limerick, the Shannon the largest river in Ireland, the Galtee mountains, Nenagh and Roscea; we visit the celebrated Rock of Cashel, which is crowned with ecclesiastical ruins of large extent; Maryborough, Portarlington and Kildare with its round tower; on by the Grand Canal, we cross the Liffey, then comes Clandalkin, with its fine specimens of wonderful towers; then the metropolis of Ireland appears in view. Dublin at the head of Dublin Bay, and on both sides of the river Liffey; is about three miles in length and the same in breadth, and is surrounded by a circular road, which is nine miles in length; it contains above 1000 streets, lanes, squares, alleys and courts; more than 30,000 houses, and population of 250,000 inhabitants a great majority of whom are Roman Catholics. The Liffey is embanked along the whole range by quays, faced with granite, and of the nine neat and substantial bridges that span it, seven are of stone and two iron. The city is enclosed on three sides by the Grand and Royal Canals, which form channels of communication with the interior of the country and supply the city with fresh water. Five railroads radiate to all parts of the country.

Before sallying out through the city we are accosted by car and cabmen, all anxious to convey us—each representing the superior claims of his car, as:

"Do you want a car, your honor, och that's the one for you,
It's an illegible Irish jaunting car just painted green and blue;
It belongs to Larry Doolan, and you'll have to travel far
To find a better driver of an Irish jaunting car.
The fare is fifteen sence, but as the distance isn't far,
I'll just say one and three pence, sir, so jump up on my car."

We proceed to the center of Carlile Bridge, which connects Sackville street with Westmoreland street, and forms the great leading thoroughfare from North to South. From this point we obtain a general idea of its extent and beauty. To the North is the magnificent column erected to commemorate the victories of the immortal Nelson, which stands in the center of Sackville street. At the left of this is the Post Office, with a front of 224 feet, 150 in depth and 50 in height to the top of the cornice. In front is a grand portico 80 feet in length, consisting of a pediment, supported by six massive pillars of the Ionic order. This is surmounted by three finely executed statutes, representing Hibernia resting on her spear and harped shield; Mercury, with his caduceus and purse, and Fidelity, with her finger on her lips, and a key in the other hand. This superb edifice was built of mountain granite and Portland stone at a cost of 50 000 pounds sterling or about $250,000. In the distance is the rotunda, in which all the great public meetings are held. In an easterly direction, on the left bank of the Liffey as it flows into the sea, is the Custom House, in which are concentrated the Customs, Stamp, Excise, and Poor Law Commissioners' Offices, &c. It is 375 feet in length, and 205 in width. Near by, inside a stone wall fifty feet high, is a new dock, 650 by 300 feet. To the south is the Bank of Ireland in College Green, and formerly the Houses of Lords and Commons of Ireland. With a pass from the Superintendent and attended by a porter, we were shown through the building and into the apartment where the Irish Currency is manufactured. This superb structure, was considered the finest senate house in Europe. It was commenced in 1729 and completed in ten years of Portland stone. It stands nearly at right angles with the west front of Trinity College, giving a grandeur of scene to the fine area, which can scarcely be surpassed. The decorations, devices, and the symmetry of the interior fully corresponds with the majesty of its external appearance. The Commons room formed of a circle of 55 feet in diameter, inclined in a square, while a rich hemispherical dome supported by 16 Corinthian columns, crowned the whole. The walls of the House of Lords are ornamented with two large pieces of tapestry, representing the battle of Boyne, and the siege of Londonderry, in a state of excellent preservation. In the upper end stands a statute of George IV, in his parliamentary robes, admirably executed in white marble.

The union of Great Britain and Ireland in 1800, rendered a Parliament House in Dublin altogether unnecessary, when the building was purchased by the Bank of Ireland for the sum of $200 000, subject to a ground rent of $1,200 a year.

The form of Trinity College is that of a rectangle, with a front of 340 feet by 600 feet in depth. In its museum are fine collections of Irish fossils, minerals, curiosities from America, Egypt, China and the South Sea Islands. The Chapel, Dining Hall, Examination Hall, are finely constructed and decorated apartments. The Campanile or Belfry, is approached by open archways between two pair of Doric pilasters, on pedestals, and surmounted by a Doric entablature. The keystones of the arches have carved heads, representing Homer, Socrates, Plato and Demosthenes. From the blocking of entablature rises a stage of circular steps the angles of blocking being occupied by pedestals, supporting figures representing Divinity, Science, Medicine and Law. The library contains about 15,000 volumes and is adorned with the busts of eminent men.

The Royal Academy, contains a good Library and Museum, where a number of interesting relics of the ancient Irish or Celtic races in gold, iron, and bronze are deposited with a number of ancient Irish MSS.

The Mansion House (the residence of the Lord Mayor,) contains a number of spacious apartments. The Royal Dublin Society, contains a very interesting Library, Museum of Natural History, Agricultural Museum and Statue Gallery for students. On the lawn attached, an extensive building for great public exhibitions, was erected in 1853, which was afterwards taken down and buildings are now being erected, one for the Society's Museum and the other for a National Gallery of Arts. The College of Surgeons, on Stephens' Green, constitutes one of the architectural ornaments of the city; its museums are furnished with excellent collections of anatomical preparations, human and comparative, and a number of wax works. The Royal Exchange is a most elegant edifice [illegible] combines all the advantages of solidity, form, and architectural beauty. For want of space we cannot do justice in referring to its pilasters, Ionic-trastes, composite fluted columns, splendid entablatures, stucco ceilings, hexagonal compartments, [illegible] windows, decorated pedrogs [illegible] and the fine statue in brass [illegible] George III, or a pedestal [illegible] marble. Dublin Castle in [illegible] the Exchange, is in the center [illegible] city. It is divided into two [illegible] the upper and the lower. The apartments of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, is a quadrangle [illegible] long. The other apartments are occupied by the Viceroy, Chief Secretary and various officers of the household. The grand approach to the Viceregal apartments is a considerable, at the termination of which is a handsome flight of steps, which lead to the yeoman's hall, and from [illegible] to the presence chamber, which is furnished with a throne [illegible] covered with crimson [illegible] richly ornamented with [illegible] carved gilt work. Over [illegible] tion was directed to the [illegible] St. Patrick's Hall, so called [illegible] institution of the Order [illegible] Knights of St. Patrick. [illegible] room is 82x41 feet, and is [illegible] some fine paintings. In the [illegible] rectangles, St. Patrick is [illegible] converting the Irish to Christianity, and in the other, Henry II, under a canopy, receiving the submission of the Irish Chieftains. In the circle, his late majesty George III, is seen, supported by Wisdom and Justice, while various [illegible] representations allude to the principal events resulting to the country during his conspicuous reign. The [illegible] and arsenal, contains arms for [illegible] men, with cannon, mortars, [illegible] houses, riding houses and stables. [illegible] look out ye Yankees who want to settle the Alabama claims. But I must close now and complete Dublin in my next.

OCCASIONAL.

—In Woods's "Insects at Home," there is a story of two Jamaica girls at a school in London, who made cockroaches their principal articles of diet. When remonstrated with by the principal on there peculiar taste, they claimed that cockroaches were clean feeders, and shrimps, which there remonstrator was very fond of, were not, and consequently she had no right to interfere.

JENKYN'S REVENGE.

A TALE THAT WAS TOLD TO THE MARINES.

Now, mind, I will not guarantee the truth of this, I can only tell it to you as he told it to us. It sounds improbable, certainly, but no one can say it is impossibe. What is there to prevent a lady, if so inclined, from ——? But that would spoil the story. And there is no law of nature, I suppose, to restrain a man who is so devoid of gentlemanly feeling as he is ——. But that would tell what is coming. If is no good saying he was intoxicated, because I defy you to get drunk on sherry and soda water; and to lay it to the heat of the season is absurd, for it was a remarkably cool evening for August. No! Jenkyns is a man who has some strange experiences, and this was not the strangest among them. Still, mind, I will not guarantee the truth of this; though, by the way, you don't find a man tell the same tale twice in exactly the same way if it is not true; and I have heard him tell this twice.

The first time was at dinner at Lord ——, well it don't matter where. It is sometimes advisable not to mention proper names. I don't think this would do any harm, though—at a dinner at Lord's cricket ground, and the second time was on the occasion of which I am speaking, when I found him drinking sherry and soda water, and smoking cheroots with three officers of marines, one of whom, with five gloves (lady's six and a half) and a withered rose before him, was telling how—"After leading me on in this way, after gaining my young affections in this treacherous manner, by Jove! sir, she throws me over and marries Blubber."

"It's womgn that sejuices all mankind," says the third marine.

"It reminds me of what once happened to myself said Jenkyns; you know the story," he continued, turning to me, "so just order yourself some sherry and soda water, and while you are about it, order some for me too, and you can pay or them both when they come; then I shan't be put out. Thank you; I'll try one of your cigars. Well, gentlemen," turning to the marines, "some time ago I was staying with Sir George P——, P—— House, P——shire. Great numbers of people there; all kinds of amusements going on—driving, riding, fishing and shooting, everything in fact. Sir George's daughter Fanny was often my companion in these expeditions, and I was considerably struck with her, for she was a girl to whom the epithet "stunning" applies better than any other that I [illegible] like Niniche, he could [illegible] him, she could row like Charon, she could dance like Terpsichore, she could ride like Diana, she walked like Juno, and she looked like Venus. I've seen her smoke."

One good in her character, at any rate," said the third marine.

"Just so. But she was a stunner," continued Jenkyns "you should have heard that girl whistle and laugh—you should have heard her sing, she was a nightingale—speaking [illegible] We rode together, drove together, fished together, walked together, danced together, sang together; I called her [illegible] and she called me Tom. All [illegible] I have but one [illegible] I fell in love with her, and then resolved to take the first opportunity of proposing. So one day [illegible] I was down on my [illegible] Fanny," I said, "you [illegible] her hands pressed it to my waistcoat, [illegible] my wife."

"Don't be silly," she said. "Now [illegible] worms and [illegible]

O Fanny!" I exclaimed; don't talk about worms when marriage is in question. Only say—"

"I tell you what it is now," she replied angrily, "if you don't drop it, I shall [illegible] you out of the boat."

"Very well, then, I will not drop it. [illegible] my word of honour, [illegible] she sent me flying [illegible] almost straight up. We rose above the horses' and she laughed [illegible]

"How jolly!"

"We are higher than the highest trees," and she smiled and said it was very kind of me to come with her. We were so high that the people below looked mere specks, and she hoped that I thoroughly understood the management of the balloon. Now was my time.

"I understand the going up part," I answered; "to come down is not so easy," and I whistled.

"What do you mean?" she cried.

"Why, when you want to go up faster, you throw some sand overboard," I replied, suiting the action to the word.

"Don't be foolish, Tom," she said, trying to appear quite calm and indifferent, but trembling uncommonly.

"Foolish!" I said. "Oh dear, no; but whether I go along the ground or up in the air, I like to go down a pace, and so do you, Fanny, I know. Go it, you cripples," and over went another sand-bag.

"Why, you're mad surely," she whispered, in utter terror, and tried to reach the bags, but I kept her back.

"Only with love, my dear," I answered smilingly; "only with love for you. Oh, Fanny, I adore you! Say you will be my wife?"

"I gave you an answer the other day," she replied, "one which I should have thought you would have remembered," she added laughing a little, notwithstanding her terror.

"I remember it perfectly," I answered, "that I intend to have a different reply to that. You see those five sand bags. I shall ask you five times to become my wife. Every time you refuse, I shall throw over a sand-bag; so lady fair, as the cabmen would say, reconsider your decision and consent to become Mrs. Jenkyns."

"I won't" she said. "I never will! And, let me tell you, you are acting in a very ungentlemanly way to press me thus."

"You acted in a very lady-like way the other day, did you not?" I rejoined, "when you knocked me out of the boat?"

She laughed again, for she was a plucky girl.

"However," I went on, "it's no use arguing about it; will you promise to give me your hand?"

"Never," she answered, "I'll go to Ursa Major first, though I've got a big enough bear here, in all conscience. Stay! You'd prefer Aquarius, wouldn't you?"

She looked so pretty that I was almost inclined to let her off (I was only trying to freighten her, of course—I knew how high we could go safely well enough, and how valuable the life of Jenkyns was to his country; but resolution is one of the strong points of my character, and when I have begun a thing I like to carry it through, so I threw over another sand bag, and whistled the Dead March in Saul.

"Come, Dr. Jenkyns," she said suddenly, "come, Tom, let us descend now, and I'll promise to say nothing about this."

I continued the execution of the Dead March.

"But if you do not begin the descent at once, I will tell papa the moment I set foot on the ground."

I laughed, seized another bag, and looking steadily at her, said:

"Will you promise to give me your hand?"

"I have answered you already," was the reply.

Over went the sand, and the solemn notes of the Dead March resounded through the car.

"I thought you were a gentleman," said Fanny, rising up in a terrible rage from the bottom of the car, where she had been sitting, and looking perfectly beautiful in her wrath; "I thought you were a gentleman, but I was mistaken; why a chimney sweeper would not treat a lady in such a way. Do you know that you are risking your own life as well as mine by your madness?"

I explained that I adored her so much that to die in her company would be perfect bliss, so that I begged she would not consider my feelings at all. She dashed her beautiful hair from her face, and standing perfectly erect, looking like the goddess of Anger, or Beauty—if you can fancy that person—ange in a balloon—she said:

"I command you to begin the descent." The "Dead March" whistled in a manner essentially gay and lively, was the only response. After a few moments' silence I took up another bag, and said:

"We are getting rather high; if you do not descend soon we shall have [illegible] coming to tell us time we are [illegible] will you promise me your hand?"

She sat in sullen silence in the bottom of the car. I threw over the bag. I felt she tried another plan, [illegible] herself on her knees and [illegible] tears, she said:

"O, forgive me for what I did the moment I set foot on the ground. It was very wrong, and I am very sorry. Take me home and I will be a child to you."

"Not a wife?" said I.

"I can't, I can't," she answered.

Over went the sand bag, and I began to think we had overdone the affair, for I did not like the idea of going much higher. I would not alarm her just yet, however. I whistled for a few moments to give her time for reflection, and then said:

"Fanny, they say that marriages are made in heaven—you don't take care cars will be contradicted there."

I took up the final bag.

"Come," I said, "say wife in life, or my companion in death? Which is it to be?" and I patted the bag in cheerful manner. She hid her face in her hands, but did not answer. I turned the bag in my arms as if it [illegible] a baby.

"Come, Fanny, give me your hand in promise."

I really hear her sobs. I'm the most softhearted creature breathing, and I would not part any living thing I am [illegible] she first beaten me. I forgive her for rejecting me. I was on the point of saying: "Dearest Fanny, forgive me for [illegible] you. Marry whomsoever you will. Give your lovely hand to your lowest groom in the stables—know with your priceless beauty the Chief of the Panhandywanki Indians. Whatever happens, Jenkyns is your slave—your dog—your footstool, his duty henceforth, is to go whithersoever you shall command." I was just on the point of saying this, I repeat, when Fanny suddenly broke up, and said, with a peevish expression upon her face:

"You need not throw that bag over, I promise to give you my hand."

"With all your heart," she answered, with the same strange look.

I tossed the bag into the bottom of the car and opened the valve. The balloon descended.

"Gentlemen," said Jenkyns, rising from his seat in the most solemn manner, and stretching out his hand as if he was going to take an oath, "Gentlemen, will you believe it? When we reached the ground, and the balloon had been given over to its recovered master—when I had helped Fanny tenderly to the earth, and turned toward her to receive anew the promise of her affection and hand—will you believe it?—She gave me a box on the ear that upset me against the car, and, running to her father, who at that moment came up, she related to him and the assembled company what she called my disgraceful conduct in the balloon, and ended by informing me that all her hand that I was likely to get had been already bestowed upon my ear, which she assured me had been given with all her heart."

"You villian!" said Sir George advancing toward me with a horsewhip in his hand. "You villian! I've a good mind to break this over your back."

"Sir George," said I, "villian and Jenkyns must never be coupled in the same sentence, and as for the breaking of this whip, I'll relieve you of the trouble." And snatching it from his hand, I broke it in two and threw the pieces upon the ground. "And now I shall have the honor of wishing you good morning! Miss P——, I forgive you." And I retired.

"Now I ask you whether any specimen of female treachery equal to that has ever come within your experience, and whether any excuse can be made for such conduct?"

"As I said before, it's like the sex," said the second marine.

"Yes all mankind is sejuiced by women," said the third marine.

"It's just my case over again," said the first marine. "After drawing me on in that way—after gaining my affections in that treacherous manner, by Jove! sir, she goes and marries Blubber?"

"Well, it does sound improbable, certainly very improbable. But I said before I begun that I would not guarantee the truth of it. Indeed, if you ask my candid opinion, I don't believe it is true; but yet marines believe it!"

'Twas None of his Funeral.

A Western paper tells a story of a deaf gentleman's mistake. It seems that in the procession that fol owed good Deacon Jones to the grave last summer the Rev. Mr. Sampler, the new clergyman of East Town, found found himself in the same carriage with an elderly man he had never before met. They rode in grave silence for a few moments, when the clergyman endeavored to improve the occasion by serious conversation.

"This is a solemn duty in which we are engaged, my friend," he said.

"Hey? What do you say, sir?" the old man returned. "Can't you speak louder I'm hard of hearin'?"

"I was remarking," shouted the clergyman, "that this is a solemn road we are traveling to day."

"Sat day road! You don't call this sand
