To wield the broom and mop.

Where are those rooms, those quiet rooms, The house so late presented, Wherein we dwelt, nor dreampt of dirt, So cosy and contented? Alas! they're turned all upside down, That quiet suit of rooms, With slops and sads, and soaps and sands, Tubs, carpets, chairs and brooms, Tables and stands are standing round,

At sixes and at sevens;
While wife and housemaid fly about,
Like meteors in the heavens. The parlor and the chamber floor

Were cleaned a week ago; The carpets shook and windows washed, As all the neighbors know. But still the sanctum had escaped, The table piled with books: Till fell the women on them all, As falls the plague on men, And then there vanished all away,

Books, paper, ink and pen. And now when comes the master home As come he must of nights, To find all things are set to wrongs, That they have set to rights;

When the sound of driving tacks is heard, Though the house is far from sti And the carpet women on the stairs, That harbinger of ill; He valuly looks for books and bills That all were there before, And sighs to find them on the desk or in the drawer no more. And then he grimly thinks of her Who set this fuss affoat, And wishes she were out at sea, In a very leaky beat. He meets her at the parior door,

With hair and cap awry, With sleeves tucked up and broom in hand Defiance in her eye.

He fesis quite small, and knows full well
There's nothing to be said;
So holds his tongue, and drinks his tea,
And sneaks away to bed.

THE NEW SUIT OF CLOTHES

I have had a good many suits of cloth es in my life, and worn and torn and member more than any other.

That was my first New suit. Albut the summer when I was twelve years old, my mother-my proud, fond mother-made me a new suit with her own hands.
