BLESS THE BABIES.

Bless the litte bables! Ah, they make the home! Keeping husbands evenings, When he used to roam, Boon compaions miss him-Cards have lost their charms There he sits contented.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

Baby in his arms. Bless the little babtes! Ah, they strip the heart Of all false allurements By their native art.

Once the belle a mother, Fashion, fol-de-rol. Selfish whims that spoiled her, Vanish, one and all.

Bless the little babies! Bridging many a breach 'Twixt wife and husband, Binding each to each. Husband stops his growling. Warmed by baby's smiles, Wife forgets her grievance.

Bless the little babies! Shame upon the wives, Ruled by self and fashion. Living barren lives. Out upon the practice !-

Murder, nothing less-Of the scores of women God had ment to bless.

Blessing, few or many; Pity on the household Never counting any. It is like a garden Where there are no flowers. Oh, the pretty blossoms!
