Polock and Fair View.

Editor Nebraska Advertiser.

I am an unfortunate fellow in some things. Several years ago I advised a certain man to do what he afterwards failed to do, and the then editor of THE ADVERTISER went for me heavy.

A few years afterwards some fellow wrote a scurrilous article about "Old Settlers;" I answered it, and Caffrey gave me goss through his paper, and the Governor of Nebraska pitched into me in an extremely long private letter, so that I had two big guns firing at me. Still later, Doc Holladay got after me, and for nine or ten weeks he just bombarded me. I wrote a letter to the Bee, and some Peruvian got his back up, and just deluged me; and afterwards "Sam Gunnison" screeched--yes, gave me three or four scorchings.

I went to the Harvest Festival at Harmon's grove, and being called on to address the multitude, did so; praised Nebraska's soil, climate and healthfulness; stated, among other things, that malarial diseases, the curse of fertile soils, was almost unknown in Nebraska; compared the present mode of farming with the past; and said that I did not want the old times back again.

Well, there is a certain Mr. C., who lives in a hollow almost surrounded with thickets of young timber, as is mad as a wet hen, and goes around saying that that d-d old Pollock, says there is no ague in Nebraska, and I have a sha-a-ake every day.

Your correspondent "Fair View" gives me the lie because I don't want the old times back again. In Illinois from 1840 to 1845, corn sold from six to eight dollars. Straw, the cattle king, had a standing offer of ten dollars for good four year old steers, delivered at his farm. Wheat sold from $5.00 per bushel; corn from 10c to 15c per bushel, shelled; pork from $1.50 to $3.00 per 100 pounds; net; wagons from $100 to $125 each, and all other farming implements much higher than they are now. No, Fair View, I don't want the old times back again.

Fair View must have a perfect horror of farm machinery, for he writes: "Any machine shop, in any town, selling on credit, is a greater curse to the community financially, than forty dram shops could be." Great men will differ in opinion. I wish Brownville had forty machine shops, and nary dram shop.

Any person reading Fair View's article would suppose that I advised the farmers to raise grain and sell that alone, whereas I gave them no advice on any subject. If I ever do advise them, it will be to raise all the stock they can, and not to run in debt for anything.

If Fair View is a fair man, and practices as he preaches, he plows his land with a bull-tongue plow, with wooden moldboard; harrows it with a wooden-toothed harrow, ora brush; cuts his grain with sickles, and threshes it with dails or stumps it out with horses. His corn ground is marked out one furrow at a time, a couple of boys or girls drop the corn, and three or four men or boys cover it with hoes. In this way six or seven persons will plant seven or eight acres each day.

Mr. Editor, you should get Fair View's permission to let your readers know who he is, and where he lives, so that we can all visit his farm, and see his old fashioned plows, and harrows, and sickles, and flails, and all the other farming tools of forty or fifty years ago. It will be interesting as a circus to the young folks, to see eight or ten men cutting wheat with sickles, or mowing the grass with scythes. It makes me shudder yet, when I recollect that in haying time, which lasted a month, I had to turn the grindstone two or three hours each day for men to grind their scythes. No, Fair View, I don't want the old times back again.

Fair View is not fair in one thing. He attacks me by name, but conceals his own name. This is a guerrilla mode of warfare that no fair man will adopt.

The same copy of THE ADVERTISER that had Fair View's growling letter tells us that the shipments of farm produce from Brownville for one month amount to $42,500 Fair View for the many blessings that we as a people had received. Well, he may growl, but I will return thanks and feel grateful.

I wonder how long it will be before some other big gun will shoot at me. Respectfully,

W. A. POLLOCK.
