THE STOLEN NOTE.

Except that he indulged too freely in the use of the intoxicating cup, John Wallace was an honest, highminded man. His one great fault hung like a dark shadow over his many virtues. He meant well, and when he was sober he did well.

BY A RETIRED ATTORNEY.

He was a hatter by trade, and by industry and thrift had secured money sufficient to buy the house in which he resided. He had purchased it several years before, for three thousand dollars, paying one thousand of that kind." down, and securing the balance by mortgage to the seller.

The mortgage note was almost due at the time circumstances made me acquainted with the affairs of the family. But Wallace was ready for the day; he had saved up the money: there seemed to be no possibility of an accident. I was well acquainted with Wallace, having done some little colleeting, and drawing up some legal ready to do anything to forward my documents for him. One day his daughter Annie came to my office in great distress, declaring, that her father was ruined, and that they should be turned out of the house in which they lived.

"Has he lost it?" "I don't know; I suppose so. Last week he drew two thousand dollars from the bank, and lent it to Mr. Bryce for ten days."

"Who is Mr. Bryce ?" "He is a broker. My father got agquainted with him through George Chandler, who boards with us, and who is Mr. Bryce's clerk."

"He says he has paid it." "Well, what is the trouble then? "Father says he has not paid it." "Indeed! But the note will prove
