SOUTHERN ORATORY.

Specimens of Flapdoodle and Gu over the "Lost Cause"-A Pernicious School-Book.

Chicago Times, In one of Senator Blaine's last speeches in the Senate he made the assertion that the south had become so rabidly sectional that even her schoolbooks were specially prepared to keep up the anti-northern and anti-union feeling in the South. He hurriedly quoted from a book called "The Students' Hand-book of Selections and Oratory." This book was prepared by John G. James, superintendent of the Texas Military Institue at Austin. It is a book of 407 pages, and does not contain a selection from anything not written or spoken by a man of unquestioned Southern birth. Every author in the book is wholly unknown in literature. The only names that are known are where extracts are given from Southern congressmen's speeches. Nothcratorical gush from nobodies, whose days, - Exchange. sole importance lies in the fact of their Southern birth. The fact that these same nobodies should be selected as literary model, when the great range Rural New-Yorker. of English classics is ignored, speaks volumes for the so-called Southern of cooking oat-meal. culture.
