Come in ; tea is waiting Pardon me for not introducing you but I supposed you had introduced yourself in my absence. Apropos, it was inbo-pitable in me to absent myself on your arrival, but business called me away.'

So rattling on, Joe ushered us into he costest little parlor that ever a poor bachelor was called upon to envy. But the cosy little wife! What was the envy of the room, with all its adornments, to the envy of such a wife? Must I admit it-I may as well right here as at any other period of my recital-I felt a strange thrill at my heart. playing, and then would leave us and relapsed into weeks; in these boating, riding, and to innumerable concerts and entertainments, all through the suggesting and planning of Joe. I felt and knew well the danger; I was fascinated at first-now I was irretrievably in love. The hought of breaking away from this creature caused me pain like unto death. I resolved to leave. No matter what it cost me, the only honorable course for me to pursue was to re-
