

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

The following proclamation was issued by the President: "At no recurrence of the season which has devoted habits of religious people has the occasion for giving thanks to Almighty God and humbly invoking His divine favor, has the material prosperity enjoyed by our whole country been more conspicuous, more manifold or more universal. During the past year, also, untrodden paths with all foreign nations, the general prevalence of domestic tranquility, and the supremacy and security of the great institutions of civil and religious freedom have gladdened the hearts of our people and confirmed their attachment to their Government, which the wisdom and courage of our ancestors so firmly framed, and the wisdom and courage of their descendants have so firmly maintained, to the jubilation of Liberty and Justice to successive generations. "Now, therefore, I, Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States, do appoint Thursday, the 27th day of November, instant, as a day of National Thanksgiving and Prayer; and I earnestly recommend that, withdrawing themselves from secular cares and labors, that the people of the United States do meet together on that day in their respective places of worship, to give thanks and praise to Almighty God for His mercies, and to devoutly beseech their continuance. "In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. "Done at the city of Washington, this 3d day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and of the Independence of the United States, the one hundred and fourth."

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES, By the President: W. E. EVARTS, Secretary of State.

The Chicago veterans of the Mexican War met a cordial reception from Gen. Grant, while he was in that city. This was very appropriate as Grant himself was a Mexican soldier.

The Nebraska City Press predicts that Ed. Carns will be governor of Nebraska.—Omaha Republican.

It does? Then that is just the same as a funeral notice for the unfortunate Carns.

Recently in Texas in a ditch called Alamo, the body of an infant child was found, which was covered with hair, which resembled that of a young woolly dog. It was supposed to have been born alive, and put out of the way because regarded as a monstrosity.

The Omaha papers give an account of the arrest of a swindler in that city whose trick is selling brass rings, representing them to be gold. He has a woman's name engraved, in each ring to suit any lady he calls on. He represents that he is hard up and must part with the ring which had been given him by his mother or grandmother, but is willing to sacrifice for a dollar or two, when the rings, including engraving, cost only about two dollars a dozen.

Some time ago, it will be remembered, the Democrats of Blackville, S. C., by an appointed assassin named Williams, attempted to kill Nixon, the colored postmaster of that place. Williams shot at Nixon through the delivery opening while the latter was attending to the duties of the office, but failed in his dastardly undertaking. The white people of the place, being in sympathy with the would be assassin, have refused to have him punished under State laws. But United States officers have arrested Williams under the charge of conspiracy against the Government, and propose to have him duly punished.

According to the Democratic doctrine of State rights, the State of South Carolina, in this case, would have the only right to punish the criminal, and that the United States has no right to enter into that State to protect its postmasters or other officers. In this we find an illustration of the sweet-scented doctrine of State rights, from a Democratic stand point.

It is not expected that the State courts should have arrested and punished Williams for attempted violence on the postmaster, but they should have done so for the protection of the citizen, and probably would have done so had not that citizen been a black federal postmaster whom they decided to put out of the way." The United States cannot, and does not claim the power, to institute prosecution against a would be murderer of a citizen of South Carolina, but has the right to punish a citizen of the United States for conspiring to nullify the laws and hinder the operations of the machinery of the Government of the United States.

Immense Check.

Editor Nebraska Advertiser. I notice that the Granger tells the people that it was very influential in bringing about the result of the recent election in this county. This claim from the modest Moore brings a broad grin on the faces of certain parties who are acquainted with the means brought to bear on Moore to prevent him from using his influence, for he has none—but to "hold him" from using his paper and printing office as the medium for doing the dirty work of the opposition. It wasn't desirable that his paper, with its questionable reputation, should support the Republican ticket, but to merely hold it in check; and a check rein with a gag bit, was put on the editor early in the campaign, even before he went back to take a look at that old cradle. We, some of us, knew then, the course that had been outlined for Moore to follow. But he came near, on one or two occasions, of going back on his orders, for he had supposed he would get some patronage—some tickets to print—or something from the Republicans. But as the election drew near, and he found THE ADVERTISER doing all the party work, poor milk-and-water Moore got sour, and for an incident in the sick of time he would have disobeyed the orders, and gone straight for the Democrats. This incident was replete with fun for the manipulators, and was like this: Moore had been playing his usual independent role of carrying water on both shoulders, while THE ADVERTISER in its usual decisive and unequivocal manner was unsparing in its onslaughts on the Democracy. Hence Moore expected to print the tickets for the Democrats, "of course," but terrible was his wrath one evening when informed by arrangement that THE ADVERTISER had already supplied the Democratic candidates with their tickets. This news being conveyed to Moore at just the right time had the desired effect. He at once became wrathful, and swore like a woman, that he would have sweet revenge. Jerking on his hat away he went to see his Democratic friend Jack Mercer, to tell him of this new infamy Frank Johnson and Joe Dooker had been guilty of. This re-adjusted the check-rein, but poor little contemptible milk-and-water Moore, feeling that he was ignored by both parties, old friends, everybody, was sour and cross, and would have taken revenge on both parties had he had a leader and a party to go to. In view of these facts, generally known here among both parties, Moore displayed cheek equal to a hungry government and its clamoring that he had the least particle of influence in any direction in the late campaign.

One of Brownville's Old Citizens Strikes His Bonanza.

We extract the following from correspondence in the Denver Tribune, written from Cleora, in the Arkansas Valley: "One of the most enterprising and successful mining companies of this section is the New Mining Company of Cleora. This company is composed of the following named gentlemen: George W. Neely, Thomas Neely, John E. Royer, Jacob Royer, Samuel H. Stewart, of Falls City, Nebraska, Charles Allen, of Rock Island, Illinois, and Paul Marshall, of St. Louis, Missouri. From Mr. George W. Neely, their able and gentlemanly President, I gleaned the following particulars. Their first stakes were set on the fourth of July last, at the Sarah Lode, near Poncha Springs, and the Independence Lode, near Cleora. The Sarah is a tellurium vein, width unknown, assaying $36 to the ton in gold and silver to a depth of eight feet and has shaft thirty-five feet deep. I have seen some of the ore. It shows up rich. It has not been tested lately. The Independence is a prominent silver vein, undeveloped. The Big Jake is also near Poncha Springs, a rich body of ore, assaying $33.50 to the ton in gold and silver to a depth of two feet; and the Little Gertie, the new discovery, carrying an immense body of telluride, assaying $75.50 to the ton in gold and silver on the surface. They are now working assaying on six other claims, on the Independence lode, but have forgotten their names. George's many old friends of Nebraska county, will be delighted in hearing of his good fortune.

What the Elections Should Teach the South.

From the Richmond (Va.) State, Dem. The North is now quite as solid as the South. New York, it may be argued, is still safe for the Democracy, and Indiana; but how safe? We look in vain for assurance of this in the gains that the Republicans have made in all the other States, and must not forget that next year the issue will be a purely national one. With our minority, this section can do absolutely nothing unless we can carry sufficient Northern States to make us apparent we are national and not sectional, and can we do this? That is the question. We can, we believe, if our people will but act wisely; but we fear this will be asking too much of them. We have no fear of the middle or frontier section of the South, but we do dread what may occur further down. That has become our terror. There is no disunion among the people, and the leaders are without influence unless they consent to follow and become the mere creatures of the mob. That violence should be resorted to in any time is deplorable, even when the people are forced to the necessity of desperate remedies, but to resort to it merely for passion, as it were, and wholly without cause, is to invite a higher and more certain retribution. There is no excuse for this. If there ever was a valid excuse, it was that-guns and whips—regimentation and bulldozing. There are no troops at the polls and no carpet-bag governments to attempt a suppression of the will of the people, and with it their wealth, intelligence, and respectability as a reserve force, what need have they to resort to these abominable and sinful devices to carry elections which can be made more easily and satisfactorily carried by fair and open means—means by which even the most virulent Stewart of the North cannot question? It is only by a course such as these, and with it every man, regardless of race, color, or previous complexion, to express his sentiments or vote his sentiments with his hands and feet, and under simple protection both of the law and of public opinion, that we can succeed in breaking the solidity of the North, now so rapidly crystallizing, and of making our party truly national.
