REST AS MEDICINE.
Some Useful Hints to the Tired and Overworked.

Every intelligent medical man of the present day recognizes the very great value of rest in the treatment of disease. It is not my intention, however, in this paper to enter minutely into the physiology of this great natural restorer...

To Boil a Ham.
Soak over night in warm water a ham of about ten or twelve pounds weight. In the morning scrape and clean perfectly. Then put it into a large ham-kettle filled with cold water and let it simmer, not boil at all, for half an hour...

Mrs. Hayes.
Mrs. Hayes' attire at the New Year reception at the White House will be a matter of interest to female readers. Her dress was of white brocade satin. Her shawl was of gold threads. The V shaped front of the waist flared in with lace and her sleeves were of duchesse lace with embroidery of seed pearls...

The Ass in the Lion's Skin.
An ass hav'n' robbed a dead lion of his skin, put it on himself, an' rounded about the forest, frightenin' all the foolish animals he met. By an 'by he met an old sagacious fox, an' tried to frighten him also, but the fox wuz an old 'un an' no sooner heard the sound of his voice than he exclaimed: 'My Christian friend, I might have been frightened if I had not heard you bray. However, having heard the music of your voice, I'm of course understandin' that you are a ass, but quite a different animal from the one I've just met. I've uttered these words then the ass, whirled round an' an' kicked him into the middle of nex' week.'

The Liquor Men's Advocate is not afraid of mixing beer and whiskey and politics.
Five hundred millions of dollars passed through the hands of liquor dealers during the past year. This shows a powerful element, which, if united, might bid good-bye to the fanatical prohibition laws. Every average average regular customer, and their eighty customers have eighty votes to say given policy decided by the bartenders en masse.

The dam and granddam of the famous trotting horse Dexter both had the white face and white feet which are so conspicuous a mark of this celebrated trotter.

BLAINES SUPPORT.
What the Chicago Thunderer Thinks About It.
Mr. Blaine's support unlike Gen. Grant's, is a very tangible and perceptible force. We have seen its influence already in the proceedings of the national committee, at Washington. Thousands of Blaine men, influential in their party, may be counted already, and the number of those who have not the slightest hesitation to avow their preference for him will not fail to astonish anyone who has the time or the facilities for making the reckoning. Mr. Blaine's personal influence is certainly stronger than that of any other living American politician.

Voice From the South.
The situation in Maine is serious, because a large number of the people believe that the will of the people, as expressed at the polls, is not being carried out. We do not mean to say that those in power may not be acting within the limits of the law; we mean to say that any law which makes it possible to change the count of votes actually cast is evil, and will produce evil results.

The Objects of Study.
The duties of the teacher are tersely set forth in the New York Journal as follows:
His business is to develop, discipline, and train the powers by which knowledge is gained; besides, in performing this work he will lodge in a secure and usable form all the useful knowledge possible. He will make as his great leading object the training of the mind; he will direct directly the pupil's attention to his own mental processes, to show him when he thinks accurately; it is sometimes called teaching to think; he will teach the pupil to give good expression to his knowledge. These being the objects the teacher aims at, he requires study in order that he may set down as the object of study. And if a person has no teacher, he still needs all of the above effects, and to produce them he uses study. It is plain, then, that study is the indispensable means to be employed to obtain education.

Not three centuries ago, in France, when a young girl appealed to her father, who was a member of the Provincial Parliament, for permission to learn the alphabet, after consultation with four doctors of law, it was decided that it was a 'demonial work for girls' either to teach or learn the alphabet. She was accordingly stoned by the men of the town, for such an issue desire for knowledge. Even a little over a century ago, letter writing, by such as Mary Wortley Montague, was supposed to be the limit of woman's brain power. Few even of the Puritan women could read or write, and though, next to a meeting-house, they established schools for boys, girls were not allowed to enter for over 150 years, and then only in the summer time, because the boys' seats were vacant. Voltaire's remark, that 'ideas are like beads, women and young men have none,' seemed to be a general belief.

A Pennsylvania paper tells of a cat which caught a young rat and swallowed it whole. The next morning it was heard squealing in the stomach of poor pussy, who was trying to eject it from the premises. When the mail closed that evening she had not yet succeeded, the rat still keeping up a tramping in the interior.

That estate of J. F. Davis fell heir to in Mississippi is proving to be an elephant on the old red lands, a petition having been filed in chancery to annul Mrs. Dorey's bequest of the same. The petition sets forth that the kind-hearted old female was unduly influenced by Davis, who secured her fortune by working upon her political and religious sympathies.

A Frenchman, living in Louisiana, whose life deserted him, amused his neighbors by telling how he got her back without trouble. 'Did I run after her to come back?' he dramatically asked. 'No, I did not run after her. I zhush publish in ze papair that I have drawn fifty thousand dollars in ze lottery, and she waz back much quicker zan no time?'

Chicago Tribune: Mr. Lincoln used to tell a story about a big Hoosier who came to Washington during the war and called a street Arab for a shine. Looking at the tremendous boots before him he called out to a brother shiner across the street. 'Come over and help, Jimmy, I've got an army contract.'
