FALSE TRADITION.

A friend sends us a copy of "The Kansas Chief," containing an article comparing, or rather contrasting Washington with Grant, from which we clip the following:

"When President, he importuned Congress for more pay. He never refused a present, but received them to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars. He surrounded himself with a gang that made the Government a disgrace. Since becoming President he has squandered more money than would have sufficed to make George Washington a millionsire. And still he begs for a third term, because he wants more money. and more power, to enable him to live in a style that he could desire. This is Grant, the saviour."

There is a wide difference between history and tradition, though both frequently become mixed, and the distinction is lost sight of. Preceding the above paragraph, Sol. Miller, the writer, speaks of Gen. Washing'on praying for divine assistance while commanding the army in our revolu-
