A MAN'S LIFE.

BY GEORGE EDGAR MONTGOMERY. One song above all songs I sing, One song that breathes of love and spring-A man's life is a precious thing. I know that we who live to-day Are born to dream and die as they Whose forms have wholly passed away; That we, woose hearts are bold and stout, Are weak discoverers cast about Amid the windy seas of doubt.

The simple faith of other years Is muffled music to our ears. A voice of longing choked with tears. For we have lost the holy trace Of God, the unknowable one, whose face

Is hidden in darkness for a space; And many men are prone to swear That God is but the soul's despair,

A being as ghostly as the air-Then out of passion and sweet breath Shall come, whatever wisdom saith, One everlasting night o' death. Alas! I know that sorroy dwells

Within the soul as soun in bells, That hearts are often fla ning hells; I know that bitter crime and lust Are part of our polluted dust-

The damned arek indred to the just. I know it all, and yet I sing As freely as a bird in spring-A man's life is a precious thing.

There is a heaven for hearts that meet, A heaven of passion wild and sweet; And strong men feel a fierce delight In hard brunt and toil of fight: They conquer nobly where they smite.

For though life darken and death be fleet,

To live is to aspire, to hear Through harsh, discordant cries the clear True voice of hope forever near; To rise beyond the earth, to find Ethereal heights wherein the mind

May sweep and circle like the wind. And oh! it is enough to be, To feel, and hear, and think, and see, To know that it does dwell in me. And there is rapture in the thought

That I am so divinely wrought Time cannot make me wholly naught! What thought I faint and perish, I Have that within me which is high As God and infinite as the sky.

Washington, March 6 .- Whatever the discomfort of the streets, the hotels, the restaurants, the cars and every other human receptacle during this troublous time, every vestige of annoyance and of impatience at them and life generally vanished on inauguration day, when we were seated in our perch of honor, the reporters' gallery of the senate surrounded by all the noted pen-workers of the nation and looking down upon the assembled wisdom of the republic. As a pageant merely, it was amasingly fine. In defiance of the elements the ladies had donned costumes of a brilliance worthy of a day of glorious sunshine and the gay colors of ruby and imperial blue velvets, of tropic birds' wings and flash of diamonds mungled with the heavy glimmer of shining medals, the wave of soldiers' plumes.
