> Our advice has not been sought by the city fathers, but we have some to grant any saloon license that will conflict with the law to take effect on the first day of June. We cannot believe that any one of the council construes his obligations to the party that elected him to transcend the bounds of decency, common sense and the probable construction of the law. The side of safety would be to make applicants for licenses wait until the new law takes effect. No one should find fault with such a course. Saloonists should be satisfied and the most radical prohibitionist will be content so long as the law is strictly conformed to. We make these suggestions, and call the especial attention of the council to them, in view of the fact that while the advocates of saloons have won the city government, it was no unanimous thing, the parties on the temperance issue being about equally divided, and the temperance people ask that respectable consideration due a powerful minority, and if courteous asking will not do, that powerful minority will enforce its rights up to the exact spirit and intent of the law. And it will 'aamad sprast asmay aut to tuamtuiod transpire when the emergency comes that the law abiding portion of this city will be equal to the task of sustaining the law.
