There is a vigorous movement on foot in Wisconsin to revive capital punishment, which was abolished in that state twenty-five years ago.

—The "home talent" of Calvert will appear before the public on the evening of the 16th inst. Their "piece" is entitled The Flower of the Family, which is full of interest and fun. The proceeds will be applied for the benefit of the Library Association.

Mrs. Dorris, the old woman who was murdered by her grandson at St. Louis last week, made her great wealth by dealing in slaves before the war. Her husband gave her all the babies of his slave women, which she sold, and appropriated the proceeds to her own use.

—Mrs. W. E. Majors presented Wills with a bouncing baby boy one day last week, and in answer to a postal from S. A. Osborn, who suggested a name for the little fellow, Wills says, "I am very much pleased with the name of 'Steph,' but Mrs. M. is determined to call it Quitt."

—Those who read the Sheridan Post, of the 20th ult., will see the point to the following, which goes to illustrate how few there are duty qualified to cast stones at his neighbor, or who knows, in the swiftly turning wheel of time, how soon he may have the tables turned upon himself:

We have it from "headquarters" that a large interest in the Sheridan Post has gone into the possession of Hon. Church Howe, who "put up" and took up a large claim that Hon. Wm. Daily held against that establishment. This was a very commendable act on the part of Mr. Howe, and the editors of the Post may be truly thankful that they have found in Mr. Howe a friendship which, if merited, was by their abuse of him, and are thus in their time of need able to realize a benefit from so simple an act as that of selling out Daily and taking in Howe. We congratulate Messrs. Fellows and Taggart—the latter in getting out even—over their good fortune for their own sake and because we can now readily see, as can the readers of the Post, why some things which we may have occasion to refer to in the future are likely to be thusly!—that whereas the Post formerly did buck most vigorously for Daily, it will now leisurely proceed to disembowel him, while it reads its nether garments in the interests of the man of Bedford.

Guiteau's Sentence.

Judge Cox (to the prisoner)—Stand up. Have you anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon you?

(Guiteau still sitting)—I ask your honor to postpone the sentence as long as possible.

Judge Cox—Stand up. Have you anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon you?

THE PRISONER SPEAKS.

The prisoner then arose, pale, but with lips compressed and desperate determination stamped upon his features. In a low and deliberate tone he began, but soon his manner became wild and violent. Pounding upon his table he delivered himself of the following harangue:

"I am not guilty of the charges set forth in the indictment. It was God's act, not mine, and God will take care of it, and don't let the American people forget it. He will take care of it, and every officer of this government, from the executive down to that of the marshal, taking in every man on that jury, and every member of this bench, will pay for it, and the American nation will roll in blood, if my body goes into the ground and I am hung. The Jews put the despised Galilean in the grave. For the time they triumphed, but at the destruction of Jerusalem, forty years afterward, the Almighty got even with them. I am not afraid of death. I am here as God's man; kill me to-morrow if you want. I am God's man, and I have been from the start."

PASSING SENTENCE.

Judge Cox then proceeded to pass sentence, addressing the prisoner as follows:

"You have been convicted of a crime so terrible in its circumstances and so far-reaching in its results, that it has drawn upon you the horror of the whole world and the execration of your countrymen. The excitement produced by such an offence made it no easy task to secure you a fair and impartial trial, but you have had the power of the United States treasury and of the government in your service to protect your person from violence and to procure evidence from all parts of the country. You have had as fair and impartial a jury as ever assembled in a court of justice. You have been defended by counsel with a zeal and devotion that merits the highest encomium, and I certainly have done my best to secure a fair presentation of your defense. Notwithstanding all this, you have been found guilty. It would be a comfort to many people if the verdict of the jury had established the fact that your act was that of an irresponsible man. It would have left his people under belief that the crime of political assassination was entirely foreign to the constitution and construction of our country. This result has denied them that comfort. The country will accept it as a fact that crime can be committed, and the court will have to deal with it with the highest penalty known to the criminal code to serve as an example to others. Your career has been so extraordinary that the people might well at times have doubted your sanity, but we cannot but believe that when the crime was committed you thoroughly understood the nature of the crime and its consequence. (Guiteau)—"I was acting as God's man," and that you had moral sense and conscience enough to recognize the moral iniquity of such an act. [Prisoner—That's a matter of question.] Your own testimony shows that you recoiled with horror from it. You say that you prayed against it. You say that you thought it might be prevented. This shows that your conscience warned you against it, but by the wretched sophistry of your own mind you worked yourself up against the protest of your own conscience. What motive could have induced you to this act must be a matter of mere conjecture. Probably men will think that some fanaticism or morbid desire for self-exaltation was the real inspiration for the act. Your own testimony seems to controvert the theories of your counsel. They have maintained the thought, I honestly believe, that you were driven against your will by an insane impulse. The testimony showed that you deliberately resolved to do it, and that the deliberate and disguised will was some impulse. This may seem insanity to some people, but the law looks upon it as willful crime. You will have an opportunity of having any errors I may have committed during the course of the trial passed upon by the court, but meanwhile it is necessary for me to pronounce the sentence of the law, that you be taken to the common jail in the District, from whence you came, and there be kept in confinement, and on Friday, the 30th day of June, 1882, you be taken to the place prepared for your execution, within the walls of said jail, and there, between the hours of 12 and 2 p. m., you be hanged by the neck until you are dead; and may the Lord have mercy on your soul."

During the reading Guiteau stood apparently unmoved and with his gaze riveted on the judge, but when the final words were spoken he struck the table violently and shouted, "And may the Lord have mercy on your soul. I would rather stand here than where that jury does, and where your honor stands. I am not afraid to die. I stand here as God's man, and God Almighty will curse every man who has had a part in the procuring of this unrighteous verdict. Nothing but good has come of Garfield's removal, and that will be the verdict of posterity on my inspiration. I don't care a snap for the verdict of this corrupt generation. I would rather a thousand times be in my position than in that of those who have hunted me to death. I shall have a glorious flight to glory, but that miserable scoundrel Corkhill will have a permanent job down below, where the devil is preparing for it."

Five years hence: First Citizen—How is the cause of education flourishing in your state? Second Citizen—Well, we are short of funds. The corn crop was a failure last year, and whisky was high, and the temperance fanatics are seriously interfering with the cause of education. If they can break up the business they do not seem to care whether the children are educated or not. Let's take a drink in aid of the cause. Here is to the youth of America. The more whisky the more education.—Inter Ocean.

It seems to us that that sentiment is already prominent. The educational question in the west is the most potent one in the maintenance of saloons. In small towns this is especially true; and we remember of reading a few weeks ago in a proclamation of the mayor of Omaha, a warning that the welfare of the city schools depended upon the amount of money received from saloon licenses. And gentlemen of Omaha drink in aid of the cause.

—The Seed Annual for 1882, just published by D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., and supplied free to all upon application, is a most valuable work, and worthy of a place in any library. Not only are its illustrations of first-class order, but its pages are full to repletion with information of the most valuable kind to all who grow anything from the tiniest flower to the largest garden crops. Being themselves seed growers on the largest scale, they bring the work an amount of practical experience hardly equaled by any others, while they are thus enabled to supply seeds of the purest quality and most vigorous growth that can be obtained. We gladly call attention to their advertisement in our column elsewhere.
