FRANK JAMES.

The Notorious Outlaw Surrenders at Jefferson City to Governor Crittenden.

JEFFERSON CITY, Oct. 5.—Frank James, the notorious outlaw, brother to the equally notorious Jesse, surrendered to the governor at 5 o'clock this evening unconditionally, and was immediately taken to Independence, in Jackson county, to answer the indictments.

Frank James arrived in the capital this morning about 1 o'clock, in company with Colonel John M. Edwards, and this forenoon they were about the city and in and out of the hotel until the hour arrived that had been appointed for the meeting between the outlaw and the governor. About 4:45 o'clock they walked over to the Capitol grounds, climbed the hill, and entered the window leading to the private office of Governor Crittenden. The latter having a few hours' notice of their coming naturally felt jubilant over this culmination of his long fight against the outlaw band, and he had, without indicating what the occasion was, summoned a number of the state officials to be present at the appointed time and witness this

HISTORICAL EVENT.

As they arrived one by one, he jokingly told them that there was a Christmas-box to be opened pretty soon, and he wanted his friends to enjoy it. While waiting he entertained them, just as a sort of side issue, by exhibiting Frank James' letter, which was perused by all with intense interest, and the good penmanship and easy style of which was generally commented upon. While the company were so engaged, Major Edwards and his companion walked in and right over to where the governor sat in the midst of the row. The light shone in from the west, and as the outlaw walked in that direction with his hat in his hand, the most conspicuous feature about him was his eyes, which seemed unusually dark and shone like brilliants, and his face, being clean shaven, was unusually pale, but his walk and manner were as

as though this occasion, which was one of life or death, was nothing unusual for him. The assembled company balled in their laughing and joking, merely out of respect to the stranger, and when Major Edwards said: "Governor Crittenden, I want to introduce you to my friend, Frank James," a death-like stillness took possession of the room, and the men sat like statues.

Governor Crittenden arose, and stepping forward shook hands with the visitors. Meanwhile the spell which had come over the spectators held its sway.

After shaking hands the outlaw stepped back two steps, and, unbuttoning his coat, took off his belt of cartridges and revolvers and handed them to the governor.

Then followed an interview, or, rather, general conversation between all present, after which the outlaw was sent to Independence in charge of the governor's private secretary.

AN INTERVIEW.

In the course of a long interview with the prisoner he said he had come to Missouri on Sept. 23, with the purpose of surrendering. Previous to that time he said he had not been in the state for a year. He said: "I come to Missouri to try to regain a home and standing among her people. I have been outside of her laws for twenty-one years. I have been hunted like a wild animal from one state to another. I have known no home. I have slept in all sorts of places—here to-day, there to-morrow. I have been charged with nearly every great crime committed in either Wisconsin or her neighboring states. I have been taught to suspect my

of treachery, and where is the end to be? I am tired of this life of taut nerves, of night-riding and day-hiding, of constant listening for footfalls, cracking twigs, rustling leaves, and creaking doors—tired of seeing Judas on the face of every friend I own, and goodness knows I have none to spare. Tired of the saddle, the revolver, and the cartridge-belt; tired of the hoofs and horns with which popular belief has equipped me, and I want to see if there is not some way out of it. I think I can give the state a substantial return for what I ask, and I think the dignity of law will not suffer. I shall prove myself worthy of mercy."

Previous to his surrender Frank James wrote the governor a long letter from St. Louis, setting forth his desire to surrender.

The opening of the Turtle Mountain country for settlement, says the Inter Ocean, will add between nine and ten million acres to the arable public land of the United States, and its immediate cultivation will increase the wheat product, and thereby the wealth of the country. This region, which lies between the Red River of the North and the Missouri, along the line of the British possessions, is as rich in its agricultural resources as any section of the northwest. In the Turtle Mountain range there is plenty of coal and iron ore, and perhaps other kinds of minerals. There is also a vast quantity of valuable timber for manufacturing purposes both there and at Devil's lake. The settlers are going in very rapidly, and the railroad companies are pushing their lines along as fast as they can get the right of way. The action of Secretary Teller redeems a whole empire to civilization.

Judge Field, of the U. S. Supreme Court, recently received a package, of which he was suspicious; and after soaking it in a basin of water he carefully opened it and found it to be, sure enough, an infernal machine, which, but for his caution would have killed or seriously hurt him. It was from California, and by a slip of paper it contained, he learned that the attempt upon his life was for a court decision in a hard case.

Near Carlinsville, Ill., Willis McVicker, a railroad laborer and a boarding boss named James Fields, fought with pistols. The latter began and forced the fight, and fired several shots, shooting McVicker through the arm, when the latter opened fire and shot the tyrant dead.

Near Palmer, Ill., last week, John Leigh, jr., went into the field where John Rigby was at work and deliberately murdered him without warning, putting several shots through his body. They were neighbor farmers.

A. W. Nickell, of the firm of Nickell & Shurtz, was in the city Tuesday. Read his local ads. Nickell has two of the best drug stores in Nemaha county.
