or HIS NOMINATION .- A Washington exchange thus relates how Gen Grant General Grant was at his office as usual on Thursday, and about his accustomed duties, apparently one of the most unconcerned and self-possessed men in Washington. The news of his nomination, on General Logan's motion of acclamation, was brought over to him as soon as it was received, by Secretary Stanton, Hooper, Ames, Pile and two or three other gentlemen. very quietly. In response to the congratulation of Mr. Stanton and friends, he simply said "Thank you," and at once inquired about the platform. A synopsis of this was read to him, and he then took the paper and carefully read it himself, saying after two or three minutes consideration, "That is good," and nodded assent when somebody remarked that the battle could be fought on that line this summer. He afterwards said that he was particularly pleased with the declaration against grams and was visited by many public men and private citizens. Mr. Chase, immediately on assuming his seat after taking the verdict in the impeachment trial, wrote npcn a blank card, and sent it to a gentleman on the floor of the Senate, whom he had more guise. The word was the exultant use
