Do you know that it is the first step to fore you have talked-men who might have done much for the welfare and advancement of their kind, and who might have inscribed their names prominently on the roll of honored ones of their country; but who instead swell the police records, and make prisons a necessity.-Did you ever see a man that, before he was entirely lost, would accept the word "drunkard" as applying to himself?-Never; not a man lives who expected to become a drunkard when he took the first glass of that liquid damnation, which the love of money causes men to manufacture for the destruction of their fel-

But you say there is no harm in it if used moderately. Neither is there danger in the cobra de capello if we keep beyond his reach. But if you should see one of your friends take one into his hands and commence playing with it, you would undoubtedly declare him insane. Yet there would be no danger if the serpent did not bite him-if he handled it in such manner as to preclude the possibility of being injured thereby. Either case would involve life; and, in making the former experiment a man risks not only his life, but the happiness of his friends, his mother,-all that should be held dear on earth, and his immortal soul.

Young man, stop! Think over all the misery you know to be justly chargeable to intemperance, and of the fearful risk you incur every time you taste the vile stuff, and it is to be hoped you will not again have the courage to visit the demon in his lair, even if he is screened from the view of your sisters, mother, wife or sweetheart.

A few years ago, Thomas Wilson was a sober man, though he "occasionally took a drink just for pastime." He won the love and confidence of an estimable young lady; they were married and for a time lived happily. But alas, he had contracted the habit of using spirituous liquors moderately; he became oblivious of danger, and in a short time was a drunkard, a demon, and a few days since added murder to the catalogue of his crimes, by killing the wife of his bosom -she whom he had taken from her parents and sworn to protect. There are three orphans, tender little children, left to know that their mother was murdered, their father was a murderer, and that all their misfortunes are the results of intemperance.

Think before taking another drink!

A Peep Through the Window. The existance of happiness, whether in community or private family, is not to be concealed. All that we do, even the smallest action of our lives, is tinetured by the condition of our minds. If we are ill-disposed those things which have been performed with cheerfulness and alacrity are done merely because there is a sort of necessity for their performance, and the observant eye will soon detect whether or not the heart accompanies the duty. As long as we are happy, we are eager to announce it by smiles, bright looks, cheerfulness, energy and activity. We think of a hundred means of awakening delight, which could not have suggested themselves to less contented minds. The world is peeping through your window. Let it find you making happiness in your house.

A Beautiful Idea.

Away among the Alleghanies, there is a spring, so small that a single ox, in a summer's day, could drain it dry. It steals its unobtrusive way among the hills, till it spreads out in the beautiful Ohio. Thence it stretches away a thousand miles, leaving on its banks more than a hundred villages and cities, and many a cultivated farm, and bearing half a thousand steamboats. Then joining the Mississippi, it stretches away and away some twelve hundred miles more, till it falls into the emblem of eternity.
