THE BURIAL OF HENRY C. LETT.

(BY A LIBERAL.) Not a sigh was heard, nor a funeral note, As up Salt River we hurried, But we longed to depart from the weary beat And wished our leader was buried.

He was killed so dead on election day By the true Republican legions, That 'nought was left for his friends but to pray His soul from the infernal regions

And thus in the dark and gloomy night Of defeat and despair we were hurried, With his cold, clay corpse concealed from right To the place where our dead are buried. The coffin was ready, ('twas Miller's best), And in rebel gray as we found him,

He may like a traitor taking his rest, With the "Stars and Bars" around him . By the side of Croxton we made his grave With our torches dimly burning, And the same old "shades" of that gallant brave

Were used for the salt-turf turning. Few and short were the prayers we said, We finished our work and left him; His Omaha friends still pray for the dead, Of their "Rathroad" no one has bereft him and there he lies in the moonlight cold. On the banks of that lonely river. No stone was erected the tale to unfold, Our dead are forgotten forever.

The following specimen of elegant and number of the New York Tribune : Perhaps this isn't a free country. Perhaps there is somewhere an act of Congress requiring every citizen to support the Philadelphia ticket or go to jail. Perhaps it argues something uncomfortably near total depravity in a man to think for himself, and to refuse to take his polities from the Postmasters. At any rate, the Administration defenders seem to believe so.

Perhaps the young man of the Tribune is a good deal angered at the result of the October elections, and not to be held to a very strict account for his petulance and insolence. Perhaps free citizens, who are neither 'liars nor horsethieves," ought to vote for Horace Greeley, the reform condidate for the Mexico, who has arrived here, brings has just been discovered, according to Presidency. The daily papers of Lisbon have an The queen of Holland has written a Thoroughbred and Full Blood.

A writer in the Turf, Field and Farm, in seeking to establish in general use a definition of these terms, says:

"The question as to the distinction between thoroughbred and full blood, although it has been much written upon, is not in our judgment, sufficiently defined. Among the people they are gencrally used as synonomous terms, and really very few, if any, can give a ra-tional reason why they should not be so

"But as it is necessary in stock breed-ing that the same words should mean the same thing at all times and places, we beg to suggest: "1. That the term "thoroughbred" be used to define a registered animal, with a published pedigree dating back to such time as will insure the reproduction of itself. (a)

"2. That the term "full blood" shall mean only the result of a cross between thoroughbreds of different strains, as Devons and Durhams. (b) "3. That "cross bred" shall mean the same as full blood. (e)

"4. That "grade" shall mean the result of a cross between a thoroughbred male and native female, and when there a k that he step up to the captain's of-fice and settle?—New York Commercial blood of said progeny thoroughbred (d) Advertiser.

"5. That "high grade" shall mean an animal in which more than three-quarters of the blood is thoroughbred. (d) "Probably the only objection that will be made to the above is the second proposition, to-wit "full blood." Our reason for offering such a definition is that it is suggestive—carries a definition with it. Among the royal (?) families of Europe the blood, in its absolute physiological construction, is supposed to dif-fer from that of the people, and a mix-ture of the two, while it improves the latter, deteriorates the former; but the daughter of the queen of England can marry the son of William of Prussia, and the progeny of that marriage is still royal, still full blood—nothing has
