See account of the symptoms and progress of the new Horse disease in our telegraphic columns.

The Horse disease continues unabated although it does not seem very fatal in its effects. In Buffalo the crisis has passed and the animals are recovering. It would seem to us that the disease is nothing but an aggravated form of the usual Horse distemper just as the Doctors tell us we have the influenza when we call it a—bad cold.

There was a severe shock of an earthquake at Sioux City and Dakota Territory the other day. The Greeley "tidal wave," which was felt in the ground in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Nebraska on Tuesday, must have tried to work its way out in that region.—Globe

The Vote and Population of the State. In Tuesday's issue we published a request of Hon. John Taffa for the registered voters of the State, and an estimate of the number not competent to register by reason of short residence.—Upon further consideration, he thinks the registration for November would be preferable. The request is therefore changed to the Presidential election. As there was not more than a three-fifth vote polled at the late election, and may not be at the next, the object is to obtain, in an authentic manner, the actual number of voters in the State, and the estimate mentioned as a reliable basis upon which to determine our population. We hope our exchanges will call attention to this subject. It is important to all.—Tribune and Republican

PASTIME. On the first day of March, 1867, Nebraska became a State. She is but a few months over five years old. No other State has, at that age, possessed so large a cultivated area, as many miles of railroad, as large deposits in her banks, as our's can boast to-day. They are just causes of congratulation. These are facts, which may justly stimulate our pride and stimulate the vigor of our spirits. His subject is, "the duty of the State to provide the higher instruction," and it is divided by two questions, "What is the true function of government," and "What is the higher instruction?" Of the first it says this:—

Diverse opinions have been held as to the proper sphere of government. One is, that it may concern itself with the most personal affairs of the individual. It may regulate the domain of his faith, and light the lurid fires of Smithfield and the auto-da-fe. It proscribes the amusements, the fashions, the hours and wages of work, and prices of food. It enters into the monopolies, charters enterprises, regulates trade, and subsidizes industries.—It enacts a system and course of education and enforces its blessings by penal sanctions. It rolls its paternalistic hand over the birth of every child, the history of every family, the character of every soul. Like the sun, "it goeth forth from the east, and its heat is as a furnace, and its brightness is as a sun, and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof."

The opposite theory gives license to opinion, and offers to heresy. It confides all charities to private benevolence, the boon it offers suffering, is freedom from its intrusion. It commits industries to the laws of trade, and prices to the regulation of demand and supply.—It encourages science, and looks toward its own triumphs with pride; entrusts education to private care and supervision, and the whole social order to the warfare of individual enterprise. According to its gospel, the only attribute of government is to restrain crime; it is only a policeman.

You have not forgotten that government should do everything, the other that it should do nothing, are both false. Truth lies in the via media. Some familiar illustrations will discover it to us.

Speaking of the self-made man, Mr. W. thus illustrates his idea:—

Some times, one appears from this class whose nature has bestowed such an alliance of gifts, that, without treading the toilsome part of the schools, he can, unaided, attain to the highest achievement. You have not forgotten that government should do everything, the other that it should do nothing, are both false. Truth lies in the via media. Some familiar illustrations will discover it to us.

Here is a fine point, and true, every word of it:—

What I have said of the numbers of young men leaving the country for the town, is true of the rush into the professions. Young men forget that it is not their occupation, but their faithfulness to its duties, which is honorable; that success, service, usefulness, in an humble business, is better than failure in one of the more responsible fields; that it is equal to it better to be a good stage driver than a poor lawyer; a good wood-sawyer than a quack doctor.

Remember this, young men, and also the following, which experience has most fully proved true:—

There is almost no room at the top, but you must work for it, or as Mr. Woodworth says:—

And yet there is wide room in any one of the professions for strong, earnest, true men. Society has urgent need of such at all times. I concede, again, that some men, by their natural vigor, are able to acquire the higher education without such aids. But that does not show that such training is not needed. I will even go further, and admit that there are men in each of the professions

COMPLIMENTS OF D. H. WHEELER.

Dr. Latham's Address, &c., &c.

This is what we found on our table after several days absence.

Dr. Latham, it appears has been "doing it again," in the way of an Address before the Board of Agriculture and the people, at Lincoln, during the State Fair. We cannot give his Address in full, but will give our readers the closing sentences. They correspond well with some ideas of our own, very frequently advanced, viz: That from the War eventually will come our great source of supply and demand—read this:—

In addition to this mining demand, all the grazing regions west of you will look to this trans-Missouri grain belt for supplies. In this region which I have indicated there is now a million of mining and grazing population, nine out of ten of whom are dependent upon other regions for food. The one million of this decade will
